Revise Taxes, Plea of Little Businessmen To Roosevelt

23-Point Program Calls for Wide Changes in New Deal Policies.

Faith in President Still Is Expressed

Council to Advise the Government Like Big Firms Is Urged.

Text of Program—Page 7.

By the United Press.

Twelve industrial executives told President Roosevelt yesterday that "little business" still had faith in his leadership, but urged prompt action on a 23-point economic program calling for sweeping revisions in New Deal tax, labor, social security and relief policies.

The group, selected at the turbulent two-day congress of 1,000 "little" business men and women and headed by Fred Roth, Cleveland wholesale shoe dealer, spent more than an hour with the President. Afterwar., White House Secretary Stephen T. Early reported that Mr. Roosevelt found the exchange of views constructive and that while some of the program advanced was feasible, other parts sounded well but were impracticable.

Aims Are Similar.

Early did not say which of the recommendations the President regarded as sound, but other officials pointed to the fact that many of the "little business" suggestions, which closely pattern those made three weeks ago by the advisory council of the Department of Commerce, which embraces many "big business' operators, already had been adopted by the Administration and put into effect.

Formation of a "little business" council to advise the Government on its current needs, and operating like the "big business" advisory group, was suggested to the President but he proposed that the committee discuss it with Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper. Mr. Roosevelt said he did not want to select the personnel of such a council.

Rail Parley Comes Next.

The President next confers with 12 business, railroad and Federal officials on railroad legislation, the White House announced. Invitations for the meeting, but fixing no date, were sent by Walter M. W. Splawn, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to Carl Gray, of Omaha, Nebr., former president of the Union Pacific; Henry Bruere, of the Bowery Savings Bank, N. Y.; Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Assistant Secretary of Commerce Ernest Draper; William O. Douglas, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission; Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, chairman of the Rail Finance Investigating Committee, and Senator Harry Truman (Democrat) Montana, of the group; George Harrison, head of the railway clerks, ICC Commissioners Charles D. Mahaffie and Joseph B. Eastman and Will Alexander, chairman of the Farm Security Administration.

Meanwhile, from the White House and from Roth came attempts to silence hilarious criticism directed at the "little business" congress, which ended yesterday after 48 hours of confusion leading to the forcible ejection of two delegates. The President said at his press conference it was not fair to ridicule the actions of the conferees. Roth

Dalrymple, Chief Of Guards, Dead

CAPT. C. L. DALRYMPLE.

Guard Captain At White House Expires at 68

C. L. Dalrymple, Veteran of 40 Years, Lauded by Roosevelt.

Capt. Clarence L. Dalrymple, 40 years a member of the White House police force, its head since 1930, and friend of the world's great and near-great, is dead.

He died last night in Casualty Hospital of a heart attack suffered at Eighth and D streets southeast while he was engaged in work for the Ninth Street Christian Church, of which he had been a member many years. Rushed to Casualty, he was pronounced dead on arrival.

A little while later, President Roosevelt issued a statement lauding the man who for so many years had stood at the White House door, the Nation's busiest "greeter."

"Capt. Dalrymple was one of those public servants whose efficiency through 40 years of service—latterly as head of our White House police force—was enhanced by a self-effacement which placed devotion to duty above all else.

"Faithful and courteous, he discharged the duties of an exacting position with fine tact and discretion.

"I knew 'Dal' from the time I first came to Washington a great many years ago. Then, as always, he was a fine example in public service.

He Steals Same Car Twice in One Night And Baffles Police

Washington and Montgomery County police last night hunted the man who stole the same car twice.

The car owned by George Kalec, 919 Evarts street northeast, was reported stolen early last night.

Shortly afterward, Scott Imirie, of Bethesda, reported to police that he had seen a car parked on a vacant lot. The tags tallied with Kalec's.

Police of Bethesda phoned police of Washington to say the car had been found. They then went down to the vacant lot, and found the car had disappeared.

Crop Aid Bill Is Approved By Conferees

Compromise Act Slated for Action Next Week in Both Houses.

Senate Defeats Motion by Glass to Lay Aside Lynch Measure.

By Robert C. Albright.

A compromise farm bill, virtually rewriting conflicting provisions of House and Senate "ever normal granary" measures, yesterday received final approval of a Congressional conference committee and was slated for action on the floors of both chambers next week.

The only way the Senate can take up the farm bill conference report next week will be to lay aside the Wagner-Van Nuys anti-lynching measure, target of a Southern filibuster which already has lasted a month. The Senate yesterday refused, by a vote of 52 to 34, a motion by Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia, to lay aside the anti-lynching bill and take up the Independent offices appropriation bill. Several Senators who voted against dislodgement of the measure yesterday, however, are expected to support such a move next week.

Agreement on the farm measure followed a solid month of conference controversy on a bill that originally was scheduled for special session action. "Parity prices" for farmers were retained as the stated objective of the legislation, but soil conservation funds provided fell far short of the partly goal.

A move to make up the bill's money shortage through a "processing tax" rider on the House revenue bill already has been started in the Senate. Senator James P. Pope (Democrat), of Idaho, after conferences with farm leaders, said farm tax amendments would be offered when the revenue bill reached the Senate.

President Roosevelt has opposed increasing the cost of the legislation above present $440,000,000 soil-conservation outlays, unless additional taxes are provided. Pope said "small" excise taxes would be proposed on the processing of major commodities, approximating one-third the steepness of the invalidated former processing tax rates. Pope said the yield, coupled with appropriations carried in the bill, would assure parity payments.

The bill provides for parity payments to farmers "if and when" funds are made available. The payments would be made on a basis of the difference between theoretical parity and the actual price.

Race Horses Saved In $100,000 Blaze On Kilmer's Estate

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Urbanna, Va., Feb. 4.—Fire of undetermined origin today destroyed "Remlik Hall," palatial residence of Willis Sharpe Kilmer, wealthy turfman and owner of the leading money winner Sun Beau, near this town.

The fire, which caused a $100,000 loss, was beaten away from the stables, where 12 thoroughbreds were quartered, including Exterminator, 1918 Kentucky Derby winner, and Nedayr, victor in the 1937 Pimlico Futurity.

The Kilmers and their workers succeeded in saving practically the entire collection of horse paintings, which have an estimated value of $100,000.

Miss Perkins Opposes Ship Control Bill

Secretary Challenges Kennedy's Views on Maritime Law.

'Which Speaks for the Administration?' Senators Wonder.

By Edward T. Folliard

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins yesterday told the Senate Commerce Committee that it would be "a mistake" to enact a bill providing that maritime labor disputes, like railroad labor disputes, be handled by a mediation board.

Thus the Nation's first woman Cabinet officer definitely aligned herself against Joseph P. Kennedy, hard-hitting chairman of the Maritime Commission and Ambassador-designate to the Court of St. James's.

It was Kennedy who recommended to Congress the establishment of a mediation board similar to that provided in the railway labor act and designed to prevent srikes. In fact, he virtually made this the basis of his whole program for rehabilitating the American merchant marine, pointing out that unless the "deplorable" labor situation could be corrected, Government efforts to build a strong merchant fleet would be "futile."

Two questions being asked on Capitol Hill late yesterday were: Who is speaking for the Roosevelt Administration, Miss Perkins or Kennedy? And if it comes to a showdown, whom will the President support, his Cabinet officer or the trouble-shooter he called back from the business world to revitalize the American merchant marine?

Besides giving her views on labor legislation for the shipping industry, Secretary Perkins yesterday laid before the Senators a file in the case of Harry Bridges, Australian-born leader of the 1934 and 1936 strikes, who now represents the Committee for Industrial Organization on the West Coast. Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, had made repeated efforts to get this file.

Miss Perkins said she was surrendering the file against her "better judgement." She said she did not know whether Bridges was deportable, but she wanted to point out that whatever chances the prosecution has of proving its case would be impaired by disclosing the file now. Many of the witnesses against Bridges, she said, were members of the Communist Party or of one of the maritime unions, and if their identity leaked out there was a "genuine possibility" that efforts would be made in the name of

Deficiency Fund Is Passed Without Centennial Item

By the Associated Press.

The House passed and sent to the Senate yesterday the $27,588,000 first deficiency appropriation bill to finance a variety of Government activities for the rest of the current fiscal year.

Passage came after the House eliminated without a single dissent a $50,000 item for salaries and other expenses of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

Elimination followed a reiteration yesterday by Representative Tobey (Republican), New Hampshire, of his demand for an investigation of the commission, of which Representative Sol Bloom (Democrat), New York, is director-general.

15th Infantry to Leave Tientsin in March; Marines Shift.

Total of 1,680 To Stay on Duty

Withdrawal Is Held 'Without Detriment' to Our Interests.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Marking its first retreat from maintenance of the status quo in China, the State Department last night announced it had been decided to reduce American armed forces in that country by withdrawing the Fifteenth Infantry, now stationed at Tientsin, and transferring to that place two companies of Marines now stationed at Peiping.

Thus, under this decision, 808 officers and men of the Fifteenth Infantry, in China for the past 25 years, will be taken out of that country while approximately 250 officers and men of the Marine Guard now at Peiping will take their place. The Marine Guard at Peiping, now numbering 527 officers and men, will be reduced by approximately half under this action. The transfer of these troops will take place early next month.

The announcement that the Fifteenth Infantry would be withdrawn from China came a few days after it had been revealed that 1,400 of the Marines at Shanghai would be withdrawn to Honolulu. This is the size of the Marine force rushed to Shanghai last August from San Diego, Calif., as temporary reinforcements for what was regarded as the permanent Marine contingent at the Cinese metropolis.

Will Leave 1,680.

When the Fifteenth Infantry and the 1,400 Marines at Shanghai are withdrawn this country will have in China approximately 1,680 officers and men of the Marine Corps, compared with approximately 3,890 officers and men of Marine Corps and Army at the present time. The American land forces, after these transfers are made, will be the smallest in many years.

Although the State Department issued a lengthy statement regarding the decision to withdraw the Fifteenth Infantry, the only explanation for the action was to the effect that "the American Government has long been committed to the principle of effecting the withdrawal of such forces whenever and as the situation so develops as to warrant the view that withdrawals can be effected without detriment to American interests and obligations in general."

First "Regulars" to Leave.

The State Department apparently believed the situation it thus described had developed, for the remainder of its statement had to do with a recital of the circumstances under which this country has maintained armed forces at Tientsin and Peiping.

The action to withdraw the Fifteenth Infantry comes after a series

Hardy Death Gun Description Sent To 125 U. S. Cities

Alexandria authorities yesterday circularized police headquarters in 125 cities with descriptions and serial numbers of the pistol with which Russell J. Hardy, special assistant to the United States Attorney General, was shot last Saturday night.

Police hope, by tracing the identity of the gun's owner, to find the mysterious attacker who wounded Hardy in front of the George Mason Hotel, then fled.

A taxi driver into whose cab the gunman had leaped after the shooting seized the gun and turned it over to the police.

Leahy Refuses to Deny Agreement Britain to Rule Atlantic.

Says He'll Tell All In Secret Sessions

Silent on London Talks, Asserts Fleet Not to Be Cut in Two.

By the United Press.

Testimony of Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, before the House Naval Affairs Committee, yesterday led observers to believe the United States Might have an understanding with Great Britain under which this country would watch over the Pacific and Great Britain over the Atlantic.

In answer to a point-blank question whether such an agreement exists, Leahy said:

"I will make no statement in this connection in public hearings. However, I will make frank statements in private sessions, of course with the understanding that it is absolutely secret on the basis that it is vital to the interests and defense of this country."

Leahy Will Tell All.

Leahy also refused to say whether there had been any recent conversations in London between Capt. Royal E. Ingersoll, head of the Navy War Planning Board, and officials of the British admiralty.

"I will reply categorically to the questions you have asked in executive session," he said. "I will tell you all about it."

Questioning on this point was brought up by Representative Ralph E. Church (Republican), of Illinois, after Leahy had admitted the United States Fleet could defend only one coast line at a time, and that there was no immediate plan to shift the Navy from the Pacific to the Atlantic. Leahy also asserted he did not intend to split the fleet into two units—one for each ocean.

Monroe Doctrine Cited.

It was the fifth consecutive day Leahy had given testimony in favor of President Roosevelt's program to increase the Navy 20 per cent over treaty limits.

Some of the admiral's remarks were precipitated by Representative John J. McGrath (Democrat), California, who said it was time the Administration considered creation of separate fleets for adequate defense and to enforce the Monroe Doctrine. He added there might be occasion in the "very near future" to use the fleet in Brazil if Germany continued "making inroads" in that country.

Church started, after the hearing had been recessed, that he might ask the committee to call State Department officials, possibly Secretary Cordell Hull, to explain the United States defense policy in the Atlantic, particularly "in view of the fact there appears to be no intention to place naval units in that ocean."

Leahy will testify again Monday.

Reich Shake-up Alarms Europe

Adolf Hitler assumed complete command of Germany's war machine in a sweeping military and diplomatic shakeup.

Fears that Germany might be planning a putsch in Austria swept diplomatic circles in London.

Hitler summoned a meeting of the Reichstag for February 20, at which it was thought he might announce Germany is taking the Free City of Danzig under her sovereignty.

Great Britain was aroused by the sinking of a second English ship by "pirate" airplanes off the coast of Spain.

An American-British naval defense agreement was hinted at by Admiral William D. Leahy.

The United States moved to reduce American armed forces in North China.

Austria Putsch Feared Result Of Nazi Shifts

European Diplomats Take Grave View of Radical Wing's Success.

By the Associated Press.

London (Saturday), Feb. 5.—Fears that Germany would embark on a new adventurous course in Europe, possibly starting with a putsch in Austria, as a result of her army crisis, swept diplomatic quarters here today.

Diplomats took a grave view of what they considered the success of the radical wing of the Nazi party over the moderate element in Chancellor Hitler's drastic government shake-up.

The elevation of Joachim Von Ribbentrop to foreign minister and the expected disappearance of Konstantin Von Neurath's influence in the government were held in informed circles to be an ill omen for the future.

It had been rumored for some time in London that Von Ribbentrop, one of the engineers of the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis, would replace Von Neurath, but the announcement came as a surprise, nevertheless, to some diplomats who were apprehensive over what they called Von Ribbentrop's recent anti-British tendencies.

Diplomatic sources predicted that Ulrich Von Hassell, retiring ambassador to Rome, would replace Von Ribbentrop in London and Franz Von Papen, recalled from Vienna, would go to Rome.

Some forecast a "violent" Nazi would be sent to Vienna to carry forward the Nazification of Austria.

It was believed here that Von Hassell's appointment to London would be looked upon favorably since, like Von Neurath, he is a diplomat of the old school.

British officials refused to comment on the German developments on the ground that the government never comments on the internal affairs of another country.

It was considered significant, however, that Ambassador Neville

Ribbentrop New Foreign Minister; Three Key Envoys Recalled.

Berlin, Feb. 4.—Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler, engineering a dramatic surprise movement of the kind for which he is famous, tonight assumed direct command of all Germany's armed forces.

Seizing upon the crisis precipitated by the "unsuitable" marriage of Field Marshal Werner von Blomberg, resigned war minister, Hitler concentrated more power in himself and a chosen few subordinates in the greatest administrative and cabinet shake-up since he took office in 1933.

In a swift series of decrees, liquidating the crisis caused when the army forced Von Blomberg to resign because of their opposition for undisclosed reasons to Erika Gruhn, a carpenter's daughter, Hitler:

1. Assumed direct control of the armed forces, appointing a deputy to take over the active functions formerly exercised by the war minister;

Sets Up Secret Council.

2. Created a secret cabinet council on foreign policy, naming Baron Konstantin von Neurath its chairman and promoting Joachim von Ribbentrop, Ambassador to London, to succeed von Neurath as foreign minister;

3. Recalled Ambassadors Ulrich von Hassell from Rome, Herbert Dierecksen from Tokyo and Franz von Papen from Vienna without indication either their new assignments or successors;

4. Summoned the Reichstag to meet in Berlin February 20 for what was believed to be an important announcement of international policy.

Hitler emphasized his new direct control of the armed forces by moving generals around like pawns. He deposed as chief of staff of the army, Gen. Werner von Fritsch, who forced the crisis by demanding von Blomberg resign, and named Walther von Brauchitsch to his post with the rank of colonel-general. Von Brauchitsch has been commander of the motorized divisions of the army.

Rebels Sink 2d British Vessel; Duce Concurs in Pirate Patrol

By the Associated Press.

Barcelona, Feb. 4.—The British freighter Alcira was sunk today off Barcelona by two Spanish insurgent bombing planes.

The ship's officers said the Alcira displayed five British flags besides the European nonintervention pennant attesting her neutrality.

The 1,387-ton vessel was the second British craft to be sunk within five days in an attempt to run the insurgent blockade of the government coast with a load of coal—legitimate cargo under the 27-nation nonintervention accord.

Most of the Alcira's crew of 25 and an observer for the nonintervention committee — all British—abandoned ship in lifeboats, but several seamen were hurled into the sea by the concussion of one of the bombs.

All were picked up and brought to Barcelona by a Spanish coast guard vessel and fishing boats. The attack took place within view of observers at Montjuich, a government fortress just south of Barcelona.

Five bombs struck the vessel. The attacking seaplanes, tri-motored Savoia-Santa Marias, roared over her at 100 feet to drop the first three, then wheeled about to strike the Alcira twice more. She sank within 15 minutes.

Most of the crew was asleep when the two planes, bearing the black crosses of Spanish insurgency, roared out of the dawn, apparently from Palma, Mallorca, the Balearic Island naval and air base.

Machine-gun bursts warned the freighter of the attack to come. The Alcira's radio operator picked up a radioed order from the two circling planes that the crew abandon ship.

D. C. Zoo Hopes for Epochal Blessed Event As Penguins 'Sit' on First Egg Ever Laid Here

The penguin laid an egg!

Strange things have happened in National Zoological Park but this one had lions whispering into antelopes' ears.

The penguin laid an egg.

Never before has a penguin laid an egg at the zoo. No penguin egg has ever been hatched successfully in any American zoo. If this one yields a little tuxedo-clad waddler, it will be a red letter day, indeed.

It was on January 21 that bird house attendants caught the first hint that a penguinette might be in the offing. Mollie and Moe were building a nest. Keepers lent a hand, they sensed history in the making.

Then last Tuesday it happened.

Mollie laid an egg.

Larger than a hen's egg and rounded on both ends, according to Malcolm Davis, the keeper who is watching developments not merely as a solicitous guardian but as an ornithologist. Not much is known about the hatching of jackass penguins—that's this species—in captivity, simply because it is so extremely rare.

In fact, there is no sure way of telling lady penguins and gentlemen penguins apart. Davis, though, knows Mollie from Moe, and since the former has a beak that is more arched than her husband's, the keeper is beginning to lean to the theory that this characteristic is a distinguishing mark of females.

But all that is beside the point, which is that Mollie laid an egg and, since the incubation period is believed to be about 30 days, the zoo is hoping—so very hard—there will be a novel and important blessed event about March 1.

The prospective mama and papa take turns setting on their precious hope for family perpetuation. When one relieves the other, he (or she) brings her (or him) an offering of fish. This will go on 24 hours a day for approximately a month if the couple perseveres.

That Moe is a chivalrous soul was indicated by Davis.

"He works the night shift," the keeper said.

The other three penguins in the cage are behaving pretty well, although every now and then one comes over as if to annoy the setter. Whichever mate happens to be on guard at that time, however, belligerently points his beak at the interloper and trouble is averted.

Mollie's egg has all but eclipsed the fact that mama zebra, in the pen across the road, has a new son. It's her third. The baby zebra, incidentally, was foaled last Tuesday, same day the egg arrived.

Senate Rejects Glass Move to Halt Filibuster

Motion to Lay Aside Lynch Bill Is Voted Down by 52 to 34.

Failure of the first serious effort to dislodge the Wagner-Van Nuys anti-lynching bill yesterday left the Senate still in the grip of a filibuster that for nearly a month has held up other business.

The Senate refused by a 52 to 34 vote to sidetrack the bill. The attempt at dislodgement was made by Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia, who charged anti-lynching bill sponsors were "obstructing" the work of the Senate.

Yesterday's gesture toward killing off the measure and ending the filibuster followed a second speech by Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho. Borah assailed constitutionality of the legislation and charged it proposed transforming the States into "mere geographical expressions."

Glass Rises Slowly.

Then Senator Glass rose slowly to his feet. He waited silently for ten minutes while friends and opponents of the bill wrangled over the parliamentary situation. Then he moved to call up the independent offices appropriation measure and lay aside this "wretched" bill.

The move failed when the Administration leadership refused to go along with the maneuver. Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley conceded the debate was "futile," but declared he would vote for anti-lynching displacement only "when it becomes apparent we cannot reach a vote—that time has not come."

Nine Republicans voted with 41 Democrats, 1 Farmer-Laborite and 1 Progressive against shelving the measure. Only 30 Democrats, 3 Republicans and 1 Independent (Norris) voted to sidetrack it.

Will Try Again.

Southern Democrats, who had predicted failure on this first effort, confidently predicted they would win on a "second try" in the near future. Majority Leader Barkley is expected to propose temporary laying aside of the bill next midweek, to call up the farm bill conference report, just completed. But the farm report is "privileged," and would not permanently dislodge anti-lynching.

Sharp words were exchanged between Senator Glass and Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, co-author of the bill, each accusing the other of delaying legislation.

Earlier, Senator John H. Bankhead, of Alabama, and Senators James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina (Democrats), tangled verbally when Barkley criticized Southern "tactics of delay." Bankhead hotly demanded "what he meant" and Byrnes charged Barkley himself was "using those tactics."

Wants to Fix Blame.

"I want it to be seen clearly who is obstructing public business," said Glass, when he moved to consider the independent offices bill.

He said four appropriation bills were awaiting consideration of the Senate, but could not be called up because the anti-lynching bill had right-of-way.

Barkley denied he was holding up the business of the Senate. He said the four appropriations bills could be "disposed of in a week."

"It is my duty to try to bring to a vote any bill reported by a responsible committee," said the leader. "If that isn't my duty, I don't know what it is. But I am not willing the whole session shall be wasted in futile debate and I, myself, will vote to call up another bill when I am convinced we cannot get a vote on this one."

Lynching Is Dead Issue.

Since the Senate last week overwhelmingly refused to shut off the filibuster by cloture, observers have regarded anti-lynching as a dead issue this session, but the debate has gone on. Yesterday's refusal to displace the measure was attributed in some quarters to the desire of some Senators to get on record for the bill. A large bloc of switches were predicted, if the legislative log-jam continues.

Wagner, in a final assault on the Glass motion, warned the Senate that "carrying of this motion will end the anti-lynching bill—I know I will never have another opportunity."

When he criticized the Southern filibuster, Glass, who has not participated in dilatory debate, leaped to his feet to shout:

"It is you who are obstructing business."

Assails U. S. Intervention.

Borah's speech yesterday was confined to the legal issues involved in the bill. His first speech several weeks ago had championed the manner in which the South had met the race problem, but in yesterday's oration he did not touch on this issue.

Borah assailed provisions of the bill permitting the Federal Government to intervene and penalize local officers and communities when a lynching was caused by official negligence. Outlining the constitutional sphere of Federal and State authority, he asserted "neither sovereignty can interfere with the action of another sovereignty."

"My interest in this matter centers in the proposition of the preservation of the integrity of the States," said the Idahoan.

"I think it is the fountain source of the power in this Government, and when that is destroyed, democratic government is at an end.

Pleads for States' Rights.

"Even in these days of change and advanced thought, I am still a believer in the old-time Americanism, in the rights of the States, in local government, and in all the policies and precepts and principles which made us great as a Nation, and which alone will keep us great."

He said that "the question of whether we can hope to escape the remorseless trend of arbitrary power against popular government, as we see it, is very much debated and very much doubted" because "we are a part of the picture."

"But as to the outside world, we know what these things mean," he said. "They mean the ultimate silencing of the voice of the people in all the affairs of government."

Borah said the same trend was manifest in this country, when elected officers transferred most of their powers to others and "we lay on taxes far beyond the ability of the people to pay, and they seem as helpless to obtain relief as the denizens of the most arbitrary government of old Europe."

Mortgage on Energy.

"We lay on debts upon debts, mortgaging the brain and the energy of our people, even to the third and fourth generations, and all they can do is to mutter their protests and seek to pay.

"But, in my opinion, if we leave to the people the right and the power of local government, the right and the power of control of their States, the time ultimately will come when they will win back, when they will take back, the powers which they may have forfeited by reason of war or of great emergency. . . .

"Without this power, without this local authority, without this training of citizenship in the States and in the communities, there can be no such thing as democracy. Whatever we may choose to call it, it is not a democracy."

He said that "when the powers of government are separated from the people, there is an empire, although it may be thought expedient, as did Augustus Caesar, to call it a republic." Local government, he said, is the people's government, and "when these are destroyed, the people no longer speak to the Nation: the Government speaks to the people."

"It may be," he concluded, "that a few lives will be lost, which we will all regret, but many lives were lost to etablish this Government, to establish this dual system, and we know it is the greatest system for the contentment and happiness of the people that has ever been devised by man."

Politics and People

One Year Ago Today President's Court Plan Rocked Congress, People and New Deal.

By Franklyn Waltman

ONE year ago today President Roosevelt dropped on Congress and the country his Supreme Court reorganization bombshell. The date is destined to become memorable, not only because it marked beginning of a legislative struggle which will receive more than a footnote in history, but because, as we now see, it marked the commencement of the disintegration of the New Deal.

WALTMAN.

The first anniversary of that event serves as an occasion for a casting up of accounts and a review of the profound political changes which have come about during the last year. Viewed in perspective and in the aggregate, those changes appear far more impressive than they have during their development.

Indeed, a great deal of water has flowed down the rivers of politics since that day a year ago when Mr. Roosevelt amazed even some of his closest friends by suddenly demanding of Congress authority for the nomination of six new justices to the Supreme Court bench, along with additional appointments to the Federal district and appellate courts under a formula based on the ages of judges.

Few persons in or out of Congress really doubted that day that Mr. Roosevelt would get what he wanted. There was every reason for believing he would succeed. In the first place, not once in almost four years had Congress defied the President on a major issue, aside from overriding his vetoes on veterans legislation—which is in a class by itself.

Secondly, Mr. Roosevelt appeared more firmly intrenched than ever before. Three months previously he had been re-elected by the greatest popular and electoral majorities ever given an occupant of the White House. The Democrats were overwhelmingly in control of House and Senate and it did not appear that disaffection in the party ranks could reach a proportion to become effective.

Yet within five months the opposition to the President's proposal had become so great in both House and Senate as to doom it. Twice during that period Mr. Roosevelt had resort to nationwide broadcasts in an effort to rally popular support for his program, but with little success. For the first time Mr. Roosevelt's voice had lost its magic effect in arousing the Nation.

More serious from his viewpoint, however, was the fact that his proposal engendered among Capitol Hill Democrats a bitterness which was not confined to the Supreme Court reorganization plan, but carried over against other Administration measures and even against the President personally.

The success of the opposition to the Supreme Court plan also had the effect of encouraging those Democrats on Capitol Hill who had little sympathy with many left-wing New Deal ideas to scrutinize such proposals as the hours and wages bill, the reorganization program and other proposals with greater objectivity and skepticism. No longer did Mr. Roosevelt speak with the voice of the people.

Indeed, as the year has progressed it has become increasingly clear that not one of the Democratic Senators who so valiantly defied the President on the Supreme Court issue will be punished at the polls for such recalcitrancy. Of all the bolting Senators who come up for reelection this year only one is in any danger—Senator Frederick Van Nuys, of Indiana—and his Senate tenure was threatened by the McNutt machine long before the Supreme Court plan was proposed.

On the other hand, a number of those Senators who steadfastly supported the Supreme Court plan are facing real fights to maintain their places, such as Barkley in Kentucky, Dietrich in Illinois, Pepper in Florida, Pope in Idaho, and others.

Thus the earlier impression of the year is being confirmed that Mr. Roosevelt's proposals can be ignored with immunity.

Mr. Roosevelt in recent months has adopted a hands-off policy toward Congress, with the result that the legislative machinery on Capitol Hill for all practical purposes has become stalled. The legislative enactments of national importance, aside from such routine as appropriation bills, during the last year on Capitol Hill can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

There is no leadership on Capitol Hill, but neither is there any leadership within the Administration itself. Mr. Roosevelt, if he has a program for meeting the economic recession, has failed so far to reveal it. He appears unable or unwilling to make a choice between his closest advisers. His attitude appears to be that they all are right, no matter how conflicting their proposals.

Thus, we see Robert H. Jackson frequently sitting in the inner councils and rewarded with appointment as Solicitor General. Yet his antimonopoly views do not harmonize with the proposals for co-operation with business of Donald R. Richberg, who likewise sits at the Presidential elbow. Mr. Roosevelt indicates that the automobile manufacturers should get together with their dealers and with finance companies to promote sound and orderly plans for installment credit—and his Justice Department undertakes to indict the automobile companies for doing exactly what he proposes.

Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System, contends there must be a readjustment of wage rates—and Mr. Roosevelt admonishes industry not to reduce wage levels. One Friday the President says all holding companies should be abolished—why have any, he asked his press conference—and the next Friday only the public utility type of holding company should be abolished.

Such has been the march of events since Mr. Roosevelt launched his efforts to reorganize the Supreme Court. And how unnecessary it all appears now! Those sympathetic with New Deal methods now control the court—and they would have even if the reorganization proposal had not been made. Whether the court last spring would have taken the attitude it did toward New Deal enactments coming before it, if the reorganization plan had not been proposed, no man can say. But certainly, viewed a year later, the President's Supreme Court program appears as a foolish and reckless—if not also a silly—move.

Signs Indicate White House to Enter Tax Fight

House Democrats at Odds Over 'Closed Corporation' Levy.

By the Associated Press.

There were signs last night that the Administration might intervene in a dispute among House Ways and Means Committee Democrats over a proposed tax on closely-held corporations.

Aimed at corporations which might be used for tax avoidance, the levy has stirred up more controversy than any other provision of a proposed tax revision program. Some committeemen said Mr. Roosevelt and the Treasury were backing the tax strongly.

Substitute Proposed.

Representative McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, leader of a faction fighting the tax on grounds it would injure many legitimate enterprise, went to the White House shortly after committee Democrats had argued about it for two hours.

McCormack smilingly told reporters beforehand he did not know why he had been asked to the White House. After his visit, he said merely he had had a "general chat."

At the meeting of committee Democrats, members said, Representative Robertson (Democrat), Virginia, offered as a substitute for the special levy a proposal to strengthen a provision of an existing law that taxes corporations which improperly accumulated surpluses.

Revolt Is Talked.

They said Representative Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky, chairman of a tax sub-committee and chief proponent of the special tax, attempted to "shoot Robertson's proposal full of holes."

Robertson himself said he was not sure his plan was workable.

Some of the opponents of the levy backed by Vinson said seven Democrats and seven Republicans on the committee would insist on elimination or modification. That would give them a majority of one in the committee. But some of the Democrats are reluctant to ally themselves with Republicans against others of their own party.

Roosevelt Signs Sugar Benefit Bill

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday signed a bill appropriating $39,750,000 for benefit payments to sugar producers who comply with acreage allotments and other requirements of the 1937 sugar stabilization act.

Agriculture Department officials, who administer the act, say they will be ready to start payments at 60 cents a hundred weight March 1.

I.C.C. Refuses to Reopen Louisiana Rail Case

By the Associated Press.

The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday refused to reopen the Louisiana & Northwest Railroad Co. reorganization proceedings. The railroad and the Middle States Petroleum Corporation, holder of 99.7 per cent of the railroad's capital stock, had asked reopening of the case to submit additional evidence.

ICC Hears Plea For Merger of Chicago Roads

Paralleling of 2 Lines and Duplication of Service Cited in Request.

By the Associated Press.

The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday heard a plea that it give immediate consideration to the possibility of merging the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads.

William Wakefield, technical advisor to a committee of Milwaukee preferred stockholders, said he was also authorized to speak for a committee of preferred stockholders of the Chicago & Northwestern in urging the merger.

He cited extensive paralleling of lines and duplication of services by the two railroads.

Oliver E. Sweet, I. C. C. finance director, made no comment on Wakefield's statement. He adjourned until March 21 further hearings in connection with the Milwaukee reorganization and told Robert T. Swaine, attorney for the Milwaukee management, that he did not regard section 77-B of the bankruptcy act as a moratorium, but as a mandate to the commission to put through railroad reorganizations as expeditiously as possible.

Swaine attacked a reorganization proposal by a committee of institutional bond holders, saying that on the basis of present earnings the road's capital structure would not stand up.

Wheeler Attacks 'Dictatorship' of 3 Pennroad Heads

By the Associated Press.

Pennroad Corporation's three voting trustees heard Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, assert yesterday that they constituted a "dictatorship over 136,000 stockholders," which prevented "real owners" of the company from throwing off "domination by the Pennsylvania railroad."

Pennroad's voting trust system, Wheeler told them, was "wrong in principle and should not be permitted."

Testifying before the Senate Railroad Finance Committee, the trustees said they saw no reason to discontinue the arrangement before its scheduled expiration in 1939. Disclaiming knowledge of whether Pennroad directors were dominated by the Pennsylvania Railroad, they declared that as trustees they were in no way influenced by the railroad.

Uniform Safety Law Is Drafted

By the Associated Press.

Congressional and Government highway experts, it was learned yesterday, have started a campaign to obtain uniform safety codes and route markings for the Nation's motorists.

They have drafted legislation empowering Secretary Wallace to withhold road allocations from States which do not have what he considers "an adequate uniform code for safety." Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the Roads Bureau, has started working on safety codes.

The Department of Justice Post, No. 41, American Legion, will hold a dance tonight at the Lafayette Hotel. All plans for the dance were formulated at the last meeting of the post held in the Department of Justice Building.

At the last meeting the following reports were made: Americanism Officer Ray L. Huff announced that his committee is designing a program which would aid the various organizations now striving to reduce juvenile delinquency; Membership Officer Mackin reported that the post was paid up 100 per cent for 1938; Sam Flatow will direct the several entertainment performances to be given at the service hospitals in the vicinity.

Commander Ilder appointed A. E. Denton chairman of the program committee, made Tom O'Hare chairman of the legal committee and announced that James H. Graham would chairman the finance committee.

B. P. O. Elks.

Next Wednesday marks the fifty-sixth anniversary of the Washington Lodge and the seventieth birthday of the national Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and the local organization will celebrate appropriately. A class of more than 30 candidates will be initiated and a special program has been prepared by the lodge's officials. A dinner for the initiates and their sponsors will be served prior to the business meeting, and a social session will follow in the rathskellar.

The initiation on Wednesday will be the last to be conducted by the present officers of the lodge, for the March initiation will be under the supervision of the past exalted rulers.

Nominations of officers will occupy the spotlight in the near future as nomination days will be held at the March 2 and March 8 sessions of the organization. Election day will be March 16.

February 18 is the date for the oyster roast which has been arranged by the entertainment committee and a Washington's Birthday party is contemplated for the 21st.

On Wednesday the lodge will meet at 7:30 p. m.

Frederick Lonsdale Observes Birthday by Keeping It Secret

'Once Is Enough' Author Exclaims 'Whee!' at Praise of Play.

Frederick Lonsdale, one of the few extant Fredericks who have not dropped the second "e" or the "k," is 57-years-old today.

"And how will you celebrate your birthday?" the English playwright, whose "Once Is Enough" is proving a hit at the National, was asked last night.

"By keeping it a secret," he replied.

At that point the telephone rang—all this in the dramatist's room at the Hotel Mayflower—and someone said something that must have made him very happy for no sooner was the conversation ended than he went into an impromptu dance.

"Whee!" exclaimed Mr. Lonsdale—somehow such an informality as "whee!" seemed strange coming from an Englishman—"Mrs. Roosevelt likes my play."

The telephone informant, it seems, had read the quotes from the First Lady's latest newspaper column in which she said "I enjoyed every minute of the show" and "I thought the acting was excellent and the play most entertaining."

The author of "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," "Arent' We All" and other stage successes is ruddy complexioned, speaks in clipped phrases and isn't particularly fond of being reminded of his birthdays.

Though he is fond of motion pictures and concedes they have cut deeply into theater attendance, he is confident that good plays, be they comedies, tragedies or musicals, will always click. Things, for example, like "Golden Boy." "Of Mice and Men" and "I'd Rather Be Right," current attractions in New York which he classes as first rate.

"Once is Enough" is scheduled to open in New York February 15, after a week in Pittsburgh, and Lonsdale may have two shows on Broadway before the season closes. His "Foreigners" will be shown in London late in March and he hopes to produce it in New York shortly afterward.

Appropriation to Advertise Government Lending Agency Is Proposed in House.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Fernandez (Democrat), Louisiana, yesterday proposed that the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation be permitted to spend $500,000 for advertising. He told the House such an expenditure would "result in a stoppage of any unusual withdrawals from insured homesteads."

Fernandez said his proposal would not cost the government anything as the money would come from premiums paid by associations which are members of the corporation.

Representative Gasque (Democrat), South Carolina, introduced a bill to authorize the construction of a Coast Guard station at or near Myrtle Beach, Horry County, S. C.

• • • •

Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, offered legislation which would require all companies contracting with the Government or benefiting from Government money to comply with the National Labor Relations act. He is the author of the act.

"No sound reason appears," Wagner said, "why those receiving the benefits of Government contracts, loans or grants should be permitted at the same time to defy the letter or spirit of this fundamental and valid statute."

Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, said he had "little expectation" that the Senate Judiciary Committee would grant his request for an investigation of the National Labor Relations Board.

Burke's proposal that he call additional witnesses to support his contentions was objected to by Senator Hatch (Democrat), New Mexico, taking of their testimony, Hatch said, would amount to an investigation in itself.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), Utah, told the Judiciary sub-committee he opposed an investigation now, on the grounds it would handicap the Senate-House Maritime Committee in efforts to adjust maritime labor laws.

Representative Wigglesworth (Republican), of Massachusetts, asked the House to curtail the Government's sales promotion campaign for baby bonds. He protested a provision in the first deficiency bill to make an additional $1,022,000 available for the program.

Wigglesworth expressed the opinion that if the sales campaign were continued it would be better to advertise in newspapers than magazines.

Office Fixture Firms Accused Of Price Fixing

Federal Trade Commission Charges 14 Manufacturers and 5 Dealers.

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Trade Commission yesterday charged 14 manufacturers with fixing prices of steel office furniture and equipment.

The complaint, which also was directed at Allied Trade Associations and five dealers, alleged the respondents had pursued practices which increased costs to consumers and tended to create a monopoly.

The manufacturers are said to produce 85 per cent of all steel office furniture and equipment sold in the United States, the commission reported.

Trade associations accused are the Steel Office Furniture Institute, Cleveland, and Tidewater Office Equipment Dealers' Association, Norfolk, Va.

The complaint said members of the Tidewater Association submitted identical bids to agencies of Federal, State, county and municipal governments.

Manufacturers cited were Art Metal Construction Co., Inc., Jamestown, N. Y.; Bentson Manufacturing Co., Aurora, Ill.; Berger Manufacturing Co., Canton, Ohio; Browne-Morse Co., Muskegon, Mich.; Cory-Jamestown Manufacturing Corporation, Corry, Pa.; General Fire Proofing Co., Youngstown, Ohio; The Globe-Wernicke Co., Norwood, Cincinnati; Invincible Metal Furniture Co. and the Shaw-Walker Co., Manitowoc, Wisc.; Metal Office Furniture Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.; Remington-Rand, Inc., Buffalo; Victor Safe and Equipment Co., Inc., North Tonawanda, N. Y.; The Yawman and Erbe Manufacturing Co., Rochester, N. Y., and the Columbia Steel Equipment Co., Philadelphia.

The commission said the Columbia Steel Equipment Co. was the only manufacturer named in the complaint which was not a member of the institute, but that it "allegedly co-operates with the other respondents in their price-fixing program."

The respondent dealer members of the Tidewater Association, all of Norfolk, are Norfolk Stationery Co., Inc.; Hampton Roads Paper Co.; Emersons, Inc.; Frank B. Hudgson, trading as Frank B. Hodgson Office Furniture, and George Andrew Carnegie, trading as Carnegie Office Appliance Co. Remington-Rand, Inc., is also a member of the Tidewater Association, the commission said.

Railroad Appeals In U.S. Labor Case

By the Associated Press.

The Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway appealed to the Supreme Court yesterday in a labor case.

It protested an order that it recognize the railway employes' department of the American Federation of Labor as the employes' representative under the railway labor act. The appeal was from a decision of the sixth circuit court of appeals, which upheld the middle Tennessee Federal District court's issuance of a mandatory injunction against the railroad.

$213,734,439 Loaned By U.S. on Cotton Bales

By the Associated Press.

The Commodity Credit Corporation yesterday reported it had made loans totaling $213,734,439 on 4,883,701 bales of cotton through February 3. Loans averaged 8.38 cents a pound. Loans have been made on 9,244 bales in Virginia.

President Backs Utilities' Purchase, Browning Asserts

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 4 (AP).—Gov. Gordon Browning toight said President Roosevelt had "pledged full co-operation by every Federal agency" in carrying out the Browning plan for TVA-State purchase of private power facilities.

The Governor made the assertion in a radio address outlining his proposal and stating his intention to pursue it "until every home in Tennessee has electricity at TVA rates."

The President's pledge, Browning said, was given at the White House last week when the two executives discussed the plan. The Governor said interests hostile to him had made it appear the plan received a "cool reception" at the President's hands.

Hoover Visits Chicago On Way to Belgium

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—Former President Hoover paid a brief visit to Chicago today en route to New York, whence he will sail February 9 for Belgium. Paul Smith, general manager of The San Francisco Chronicle, is accompauying him.

Smith said Hoover had been invited by the Belgian Government to participate in a program late this month commemorating the former food administrator's work abroad during the World War.

Supreme Court Weighs Tract-Passing Sentence

The Supreme Court took under advisement yesterday the appeal of Alma Lovell, sentenced in Griffin, Ga., for violation of a city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of circulars without permission of the city manager. The woman, member of a religious organization, was sentenced to 50 days in jail in default of a $50 fine for distributing religious tracts.

Trust Foundation Accused by SEC

By the Associated Press.

The Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday accused the Benjamin Franklin Foundation, Inc., of Philadelphia, of not giving full information to the public on trust certificates offered for sale in interstate commerce.

The accusation was made in an equity suit filed in Newark, N. J., with Federal Judge William Clark. Clark issued an order requiring the foundation and three of its officers to show cause why they should not be enjoined from "misrepresentation" of the certificates.

The commisison alleged that since February 26, 1936, the corporation had sold the public more than $4,000,000 of its trust certificates and was preparing to sell $10,000,000 more.

Ex-Sen. Gore, Wife Injured In Auto Crash

Former Legislator's Car Collides With Capital Refuse Truck.

Former Senator and Mrs. Thomas P. Gore were injured in a traffic crash yesterday when their car, driven by Mrs. Gore, collided with a refuse truck at Twenty-second and P streets northwest.

Neither was seriously injured, though both were admitted to Emergency Hospital for lacerations, bruises and shock.

Police say the former Senator, who is blind, was riding on the front seat with his wife when they collided with the truck, operated by Chester Paxson, 1525 D street southeast. No arrests were made.

J. Ray Thompson, 2515 Thirteenth street northwest, Gore's secretary, said the former Senator was on his way to trade in the car for a new automobile. The garage, where a bill of sale had already been drawn up, was only two blocks distant.

The Gores live here at 3910 Connecticut avenue. Since losing an election fight to Senator Josh Lee, Gore has been practicing law here.

In a "freak accident," Wilton Lewis, 25, 513 Eleventh street southeast, was injured when a load of corrugated iron fell on him while he was riding in the back of a truck. The accident occurred as the truck turned at Shannon place and Chicago street southeast. He is at Casualty Hospital with a possible fractured pelvis, fractured hip and concussion of the brain.

Margaret Bruce, 42, of Chevy Chase, Md., was treated at Emergency Hospital for minor bruises and cuts after an accident at Fourteenth and F streets northwest. Police say she was struck by a streetcar operated by Leon Powell, 29, 230 Fourteenth street southeast.

Lola I. Stricker, 6, of 1121 I street northwest, was slightly injured at noon when struck by a car near her home. Taken to Garfield Hospital, she was treated for lacerations and brush burns.

Chinese Arrest 700 in Plot to Seize Canton

Raids Made as Japanese Fliers Watch; Pirates Take Over Islands.

By the Associated Press.

Hongkong (Saturday), Feb. 5.—A Japanese plot to overthrow the nationalist government of Kwangtung Province and set up a pro-Japanese administration at Canton was reported thwarted today with the arrest of 700 Japanese undercover agents.

At the same time a group of one-time Chinese pirate chieftains were reported reliably to have formed a Japanese-backed administration on several small islands off the coast of the south China province.

Advices received from Canton, where martial law was in force, said the arrests were made in a city-wide roundup and a raid on the headquarters of the Japanese agents.

The headquarters was said to have had a wireless station capable of exchanging messages with Japan. Hand grenades and other munitions were reportedly stored in the building.

Fliers Watch for Sign.

Japanese airplanes which droned over Canton all day yesterday without dropping bombs appeared to be observing the headquarters building. It was believed they were awaiting a signal from the agents indicating that the coup d'etat had been engineered.

The Japanese reputedly planned to replace the Canton government with one headed by Li Sze-hao, member of the recently established Japanese-supported Peiping regime, who arrived in Canton last week.

Shanghai (Saturday), Feb. 5 (AP). Chinese today were fighting a desperate rear guard action along the frozen banks of the Hwai River to cover the retreat of their main army northward from Japanese conquered Pengpu.

The Chinese army was withdrawing to positions near Kuchen, approximately 30 miles north of Pengpu, for a renewed defense of the 180-mile coridor along the Lunghai Railroad that separates the Japanese areas of conquest in North and Central China.

2 Rebel Planes Sink 2d British Ship Off Spain

McCracken, of Glasgow, said:

"The Alcira was steaming within the route set by the Nyon (anti-piracy) agreement. Mate David Harkness and six of the crew were on duty. The others were asleep. We were attacked about 6:30 a. m.

"We were flying the British flag and the British colors were painted plainly on both sides of the ship. The planes could not have helped knowing our nationality.

"It all happened so fast that some of the men who had been sleeping did not have time to dress.

London, Feb. 4—Italy, under pressure from Great Britain and France, agreed tonight to their program for stamping out pirate attacks on Mediterranean shipping.

Count Dino Grandi, Italian ambassador to Great Britain, gave Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden Italy's consent to the Franco-British proposals which were understood to include drastic measures.

The Italian Embassy announced "the Italian government concur with measures which the British government intend to adopt in the zone of the western Mediterranean reserved to the British naval patrol. . . At the same time the Italian government proposed to adopt similar measures in the zone entrusted to the Italian naval patrol."

No Change Seen in Nazi Policy Despite Shake-up in Personnel

By the United Press.

A German Embassy spokesman last night said government changes announced in Berlin were of men only and not of policies.

"There will be a continuation of our same quiet line of policy," the spokesman said.

Elsewhere among authorities here there was a disposition to regard the new appointments as largely a compromise between the army group and the Nazi party group. That applied particularly to the adoption by Chancellor Hitler himself of the title "chief of the national defense," former title of Gen. Werner von Blomberg, who was retired. Experts said Hitler's assumption of the title avoided any offense either to the army leaders, many of whom reportedly wanted another army man to succeed Blomberg, and those party men who wished a political appointment.

The fact that Hitler will be chief of the defense forces caused no surprise here, inasmuch as the President of the United States also is commander in chief of both the army and navy. It has been assumed for years that Hitler was the real directiong power of these German forces.

The significance of changes in the foreign office was regarded as more obscure, but again a compromise appeared to have been effected, inasmuch as Dr. Konstantin von Neurath was moved to a position which indicated no demotion from his place as foreign minister, while Joachim von Ribbentrop was promoted.

Experts well acquainted with the German foreign policy doubted the change would affect the German Embassy here, as Ambassador Hans Heinrich Dieckhoff is closely associated with Ribbentrop.

Little Business Urges 23-Point Recovery Plan

Business

told Early that delegates "planted" in the meeting by interests he declined to reveal were responsible for the disorderly procedure.

Plan Steam-Rollered.

The 23-point program was selected from more than 100 resolutions steam-rollered through the conference. As forecast, the language used in some of the resolutions was washed and laundered, and such words as "malicious attacks by government on business" were scrapped in favor of more temperate phraseology.

In its final form the "little business" document expressed thanks for "this first recognition of their part in the national economy." It pointed out that small industries did more than half of the total volume of business in the country; that they still were the preponderant factor in the maintenance of employment; that they operated to stabilize this country's economic life through a wider diffusion of activity, and that they and their families and employes constituted a "major portion" of national purchasing power.

After the twenty-third recommendation, the committee said:

"We reaffirm our faith in our Government and our President and we petition that these recommendations be given careful consideration and, if judged to be in the best interest of the Nation, they be speedily put into effect."

The committee opposed as "questionable" the merit of a wage-hour bill because of geographical differentials. It urged that Works Progress Administration labor or money be not used for building purposes and urged legislation designed to curb "destructive" competition of chain stores.

President in Accord.

The President is in agreement with "big" and "little" business on some points of their respective programs, but is in sharp disagreement on others. He has approved tax changes which will exempt "little" business under the undivided profits tax and make the load lighter on big operators and has agreed to modifications of the capital gains and losses levy. He has modified an earlier position regarding business holding companies and now sees eye to eye with industrialists in the need of eliminating only those units which serve no useful purpose as an immediate objective.

He is ready to balance the budget as soon as business conditions and unemployment relief costs permit, according to his messages to Congress, but this achievement is considered unlikely before 1940. He regards Government spending during a recession as a stimulus to business which the "little" operators proposed today.

The President never has publicly admitted that any New Deal policies have retarded the flow of private capital into new enterprises, as charged by little and big business. On the need of Government cooperation with business, his position is that business is the laggard. Administration of relief was centralized in Washington with his consent. He has indicated a willingness to approve certain changes in the Social Security Act when and if the present provisions prove oppressive to business.

Investment Rule Slated.

Despite business and finance protests, the President has been assured that SEC regulations are not too restrictive. He approved recent SEC bans directed at curbing short-selling on the markets, and a high SEC official yesterday said recommendations for strict regulation of investment companies would be sent to Congress within a month.

On the question of the need of a wage-hour bill, however, the President is adamant. A floor for wages and a ceiling for hours was pledged by him in his 1936 campaign and he is demanding that Congress enact such a measure. He conferred yesterday with Chairman Mary Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, of the House Labor Committee, who afterward predicted early action on a wage-hour bill.

Likewise, Mr. Roosevelt has given neither big nor little business much sympathy in their demands that labor be made more responsible. The Administration opposed amendments to the Wagner act last session because the President felt that labor should be given the same chance as industry to put its own house in order without Government interference.

Diplomats Fear Putsch in Austria

Reaction

Henderson was called home from Berlin this week for conferences with Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden.

He returned to Berlin today.

There was intense activity in diplomatic circles generally far into the night.

A central European move by Germany was the most feared possibility. Some quarters reported a Nazi putsch in Austria had been planned to coincide with last Sunday's scheduled meeting of the Reichstag which was canceled. Austrian police activity was credited with forestalling such a move then.

Czechs Strongly Armed.

Czechoslovakia and the free city of Danzig did not figure so prominently in the speculation upon Germany's future plans because, it was pointed out, Czechoslovakia now is strongly armed and it was believed that Germany was not yet ready to risk a conflict with Poland over Danzig.

One question raised in the speculation was the likely reaction of the German army under the new setup toward possible new adventures such as a coup in Austria or increased intervention on behalf of Spanish insurgents.

Whatever the outcome of the shakeup might be, diplomatic sources were agreed that it created an anxious situation for Europe.

Diplomatic circles here had regarded Von Ribbentrop as somewhat of a failure in his mission to "sell" Chancellor Hitler to the British government.

Hitler Assumes Command Of All German Armed Forces

deputy warlord with the title of "chief of the high command of the armed forces."

Hitler's right hand man, Col. Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering, prime minister of Prussia, dictator of economic self-sufficiency, air minister, etc., was raised to the rank of field marshal general.

With Von Blomberg eliminated, this title makes Goering the only German field marshal in active service. Goering had been known to be working for Von Blomberg's post as war minister as well.

The drastic reorganization of Nazi rule came after days and nights of maneuvering in which Von Fritsch had sought to force a showdown on the whole question of Nazi control of the army.

Hitler's decree said:

"Henceforth, I, personally, will exercise direct command over the entire armed establishment.

War Ministry Under Hitler.

"The former office of state secretary in the war ministry, with its function as 'high command of the armed forces' and as my military staff, stands directly under my command.

"As chief of the high command of the armed forces stands the former state secretary in the war ministry (Keitel).

"He takes the rank of cabinet minister. The high command of the armed forces simultaneously takes over the functions of the war ministry.

"The chief of the high command of the armed forces exercises, as my deputy, the functions previously belonging to the Reichs war minister."

To Von Blomberg, in seclusion on the Italian Isle of Capri on a honeymoon from which he is not expected to return to Germany, Hitler sent the following letter:

"Since the re-establishment of full German soverignity in 1936 from a military as well as a territorial point of view, you have repeatedly asked to be relieved from your duty which made the most severe demands on your health.

Fuehrer Praises Blomberg.

"I now recognize your oft-repeated requests to resign after the fifth year of the reconstruction of our nation and its military power. I hope you will find the recreation in your retirement to which you are entitled more than anyone else.

"It was on January 30, 1933, when you, my field marshal, as first officer of the new Reich, gave your oath of loyalty to the Nazi state leadership. During five years you have lived up to this oath unwaveringly.

"During this period the most unique military reorganization known in German history has been carried out. With this reorganization your name will go down in history for all time.

"I express to you in this hour, in my name as well as in the name of the German nation, my deepest gratefulness."

Generals Fought Party.

To his secret cabinet council on foreign policy Hitler named Goering, Von Brauchitsch, Keitel, Von Ribbentrop, Rudolf Hess, minister without portfolio; Paul Goebbels, minister of propaganda; Dr. Hans Heinrich Lammers, minister without portfolio, and Admiral Erich Raeder, chief of staff of the navy.

The triumph of Nazi party leaders over the disaffected generals led by Von Fritsch had been predicted freely by sources close to the government.

While the army leaders were known to be bitterly opposed to Von Blomberg's marriage to a woman who would not have been approved as the wife of a junior officer, the real tension within the crisis was the conflict between party and army leaders.

Hitler accepted Von Fritsch's resignation with a few words of commendation for past services. Von Fritsch, much of whose struggle with party leaders had been on religious grounds, resigned at the same time he demanded Von Blomberg, his superior officer, step out.

Goering, emerging with the rank of field marshal general, appeared in line for the war minister's post just as soon as Hitler decides he will relinquish direct, personal control.

At the same time, control of foreign policy went into the hands of a dyed-in-the-wool Nazi, Von Ribbentrop, the new foreign minister. Von Neurath will preside over the newly created privy council, but he will be overshadowed completely by old-time Nazis like Goering, Ribbentrop, Paul Joseph Goebbels, Rudolf Hess, and Dr. Hans Heinrich Lammers.

New Officials Face Test.

Walther von Brauchitsch, elevated to the rank of colonel general and the post of chief of staff of the army; Admiral Erich Raeder, chief of staff of the navy, and Wilhelm Keitel, new chief of the high command of the armed forces, are soldiers without political ambitions.

They probably will be chiefly technical advisers on military matters in this council.

With Gen. Werner von Fritsch removed as chief of staff of the Army, the most outspoken military opponent of certain tendencies of national socialism was eliminated.

Significantly enough, Gen. Ludwig Beck as chief of the general staff and Gen. Wilhelm Adams, head of the Military Defence Academy, were not placed on the privy council.

The first interpretation in political circles, which were overwhelmed by the multitude of changes to digest and evaluate, was that these two men must make up their minds just where they stand.

They have been known hitherto as Von Fritsch men.

Essentially the new order proclaimed by Hitler is a co-ordination and Nazi domination of all forces of the country that are needed to regain the place in the sun to which the chancellor believes Germany entitled.

Goering Outranks All.

On the face of things, Goering for the moment seems not to have gained everything that was expected for him.

If past history is any criterion, however, he obtained exactly what he wanted.

Hitler apparently has stifled army opposition by placing a considerable number of leaders in positions of greater responsibility than before.

Outranking them all, however, is Goering.

Anyone who knows how charged with energy he is realizes he will not be slow to assert his rank.

It is characteristic of Hitler's ability to sense the difficulty of a given situation and meet it by an apparently temporary compromise—so he did not go the full limit this time by making Goering war minister.

Once the generals become accustomed to the new order, the appointment of Goering to the post can follow without friction.

Keitel, designated as Hitler's deputy, probably will be in military affairs only what Hess is in party affairs.

When Hitler first assumed power it was thought generally that the appointment of Hess as his deputy in the Nazi Party meant he was Germany's No. 2 man.

In actual practice, however, Hess throughout merely has carried out orders by Hitler while Goering, as the Prussian prime minister and his numerous other offices, was wont to act on his own.

Diplomatic Shuffle in Offing.

A general shuffling around of leading Ambassadors, except Hans Dieckhoff, who only recently took over the Washington post, has been in the offing for a long time.

The problem hitherto had been what to do with Von Ribbentrop. There had been talk he would become minister for colonial affairs, but the colonial situation did not ripen quickly enough for such an appointment.

Von Neurath reached the age limit of 65 last Wednesday, furnishing the occasion to put Von Ribbentrop where he always wanted to be.

This automatically opened Von Ribbentrop's post as Ambassador to London to Ulrich von Hassell, who was recalled as Ambassador to Rome and who long had been known to be slated to go to London.

The impression prevailed that Franz von Papen, recalled as Ambassador to Vienna, would retire permanently, although the possibility he might go to Rome also was envisaged.

What the Reichstag session called for February 20 would bring was anybody's guess.

There was considerable circumstantial evidence to indicate Hitler may proclaim that Germany was taking Danzig under her sovereignty.

Dalrymple

His passing will be mourned by many friends, of whom I count myself one."

Stricken down on the street within a short distance of his home, 149 Kentucky avenue southeast, Capt. Dalrymple was taken by a passerby to the office of Dr. A. D. Butz, 428 H street southeast. Dr. Butz called a Casualty Hospital ambulance which responded with Dr. Ross Jung in charge. On arrival at the hospital, Capt. Dalrymple was dead.

Capt. Dalrymple was born June 8, 1869, in Steubenville, Ohio, the son of Ellis and Annie Dalrymple. He received his education in public schools in Ohio.

He was appointed to the Metropolitan Police Department January 2, 1895, and on August 8, 1898, was detailed to the White House. In the first year of the first Administration of Theodore Roosevelt, he was promoted to detective sergeant, a rank he held almost 30 years.

In October, 1922, when the White House police force was established by act of Congress and park and metropolitan policemen detailed there were consolidated, Capt. Dalrymple became a member of the new force, still with the rank of sergeant. In June, 1930, he was made a captain and placed in charge of the White House force.

Knew Eight Presidents.

During his two-score years of service, Capt. Dalrymple knew and was known by eight presidents and literally knew thousands of White House visitors. Posted at the main entrance of the executive mansion, he saw hundreds pass into the office of the President's secretary daily. Those he knew were admitted by a nod of his head; those he did not know needed to give a satisfactory account of themselves.

TR AD 2

Since he was assigned to the door of the White House during the Wilson Administration, he acquired a "continuing knowledge of officials" probably unmatched by any one else in Washington. In the following years, he became the busiest "greeter" in the Nation and gained a reputation for remembering names and faces which he justified more than once when he forestalled possible danger to the men whose safety was in his charge.

Once, during the Taft Administration, he recognized a visitor as a man named Strickland, from Arkansas, who had laid claim to the whole of Pike County. This man arrived at the White House, wildly angry and armed with a .45-caliber revolver, and attempted to force his way into the President's office. Capt. Dalrymple recognized him, disarmed the man and prevented what might have been a tragedy.

Another time, during the Wilson Administration, when the World War brought an endless horde of cranks to Washington, Capt. Dalrymple turned away another man whom he recognized and remembered. This man had claimed to be the inventor of a machine gun which was to blast the enemy from the face of the earth.

Quiet, mild-mannered and stockily built, Capt. Dalrymple proved himself more than once a match for would-be invaders of the White House. He came by his useful strength honestly enough.

Between his school years until the depression of 1893 he was an iron puddler, a muscle building trade which he quit when unemployment came with financial panic. His father, a Union veteran, was then a pension examiner in Washington and young Clarence Dalrymple came here for a visit. During that visit he secured his appointment to the police force and was assigned to patrol a beat in the section then known as "Swampoodle" and which was no assignment for any but the toughest policeman.

Capt. Dalrymple served several terms as president of the Policeman's Association.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Leona T. Dalrymple; one daughter, Miss Nellie E. Dalrymple; two sons, Robert C. and Charles E. Dalrymple; two sisters, Mrs. Mary V. Mitchell, of Washington, and Mrs. Eva M. McCurdy, of St. Petersburg, Fla.; two brothers, W. Earl Dalrymple, of Washington, and Ira B. Dalrymple, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and three grandchildren.

Miss Perkins Condemns Ship Mediation Law

Maritime

discipline to get them to change their testimony or to refrain from appearing altogether.

After looking it over, Senator Vandenberg and Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, chairman of the Commerce Committee, said they had been unable to find what they wanted, and it was decided to ask Miss Perkins to send down an assistant to help in the search.

In a letter to Senator Vandenberg on January 22, Secretary Perkins revealed that the chief of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Seattle had recommended last fall that a warrant for Bridges' arrest be issued. The letter showed further that the central office decided not to act on this recommendation pending an "examination of other aspects of the case."

Calls Bill Mistake.

Senators Copeland and Vandenberg were unable to find the recommendation or subsequent testimony in the Bridges file.

In her statement on the bill to set up mediation machinery, Miss Perkins said at the outset that "I think it would be a mistake to enact this bill or anything like it into law." She quickly added that she had the "highest regard" for Chairman Kennedy and did not want it to be understood that she was criticizing the Maritime Commission or the National Mediation Board.

Toward the end of her prepared statement, she said:

"I think the United States Maritime Commission also can help a great deal by encouraging and promoting the practices and procedures of collective bargaining among the shipping companies. If it used its influence to promote the making of proper collective bargaining agreements by the shipping companies it could do more toward establishing and maintaining peaceful labor relations in the shipping industry than the enactment of this bill could possibly hope to accomplish. . . ."

Plan Termed Coercive.

The National Maritime Union, C. I. O. affiliate, which has been fighting the mediation board plan, has argued that it was 'coercive" legislation designed to rob seamen of their right to strike at a time when they are engaged in collective bargaining with the ship operators.

Secretary Perkins agreed that the shipping industry is not "ripe" for mediation and arbitration machinery such as is provided by the railway labor act. Railroad workers, she pointed out, are fully organized, and the railroads recognize the right to organize and bargain collectively.

"In the shipping industry," Secretary Perkins continued, "the situation is entirely different. The employes are not fully organized. The employers are not convinced that collective bargaining is a good thing, and many of them do not want to deal with the unions.

"Only a part of the industry is covered by agreements, and many of these are of recent date. Both management and employes have still to learn how to administer these agreements so they will promote the interests of both and develop mutual understanding and friendly relations. The attempts of the employers to interfere with the employes' right to organize are numerous, and strikes for the protection of employes and their organizations are frequent. Under these circumstances it is quite impossible to deal with the problem of unfair labor practices as the railway act does."

The Labor Department head went further and said that "if the shipping industry is not ripe for a law like the railway labor act, it may even prove disastrous to try to impose such a law on the industry."

Many Rows Settled.

Miss Perkins said the Labor Department is "able and willing" to assist in bringing about peaceful relations in the shipping industry, and in the past has settled many disputes in the industry. She added:

"I would recommend, therefore, that we permit the present promising developments to continue to work themselves out. In a few years both the managements and the men and their organizations will have gained the experience necessary for proper maintenance and administration of labor agreements and of the labor adjustment machinery that these agreements set up. They will have learned to maintain discipline and responsibility in their organizations. When this has been achieved to an extent that approximates the labor relations that prevailed on the railroads at the time the railway labor act was enacted in 1926, then the time will be ripe for enacting a law similar to this bill for the shipping industry."

Chairman Kennedy, who is to leave for his new post in London at the end of this month, has an almost entirely different approach. He told the Senate Commerce Committee that the program for rehabilitating the American merchant marine ought to start out with some assurance of peace and discipline.

Right now, he said, the various unions are fighting one another, and the ship captains are losing their authority. For the Government to spend millions of dollars to subsidize new ships without being assured of a settled personnel policy, he said, would be unfair to the taxpayers whose money is being used. He reminded the committee, too, that the 65 new merchant ships now projected at a cost of $200,000,000 will be potential auxiliaries for the Navy, to be used as supply ships or transports in case of emergency.

U. S. Will Withdraw Infantry, Cut Force in China to 1,680

of demands in Congress that this Government "get out of China"—evacuate all of its nationals and withdraw all of its armed forces. American authorities ever since last July have urged Americans to leave China but not until last night was any action taken to diminish the American armed forces stationed in that country prior to the Japanese invasion of last year.

Indeed, the State Department has defended the presence of these armed forces in China as necessary, although explaining that prior to the Japanese attacks on China last July serious consideration was being given to diminishing American forces on Chinese soil.

As recently as January 8 in a letter to Vice President John N. Garner, Secretary of State Cordell Hull defended the presence of these troops in China as necessary, asserting they were there "for the protection of American nationals primarily against mobs or other uncontrollable elements."

"It has been the desire and the intention of the American Government to remove these forces when performance of their function of protection is no longer called for, and such remains its desire and expectation," Hull on that occasion wrote the Vice President.

"Developments in China during the years immediately preceding the outbreak of the present hostilities between China and Japan," Hull continued, "afforded the Government of the United States reasonable expectation that the armed forces of this country might soon be withdrawn from China in an orderly way and to the advantage of this and other countries.

"The normal trend of events, however, was interrupted when fighting broke out and spread to various parts of China."

First Move, Says Nye.

The State Department announcement caused surprise, even among those advocating the withdrawal of American armed forces from China. Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, who has been a leader of the mandatory neutrality and "get out of China" bloc in the Senate, told the United Press the action "puzzled" him and that he would propose in the Senate that the State Department explain.

He added, however, that "it is a step in the right direction," adding that "I have always felt, and some Army officers agree, that our American forces in China are too small to be really effective in cases of serious trouble when they would be sacrifice soldiers."

"The first move has been made," Nye asserted. "We should go all the way and remove all our soldiers from China and thus minimize the possibilities of an incident that might plunge this country into another war."

Stationed Since 1912.

The Fifteenth Infantry has been stationed at Tientsin since January 1912, after the Chinese revolution which resulted in the overthrow of the Manchu dynasty and in consequence of various disorders which ensued. Since that time this Government—as well as other governments—has maintained a small force at Tientsin.

This was done under the authority of the Boxer Protocol, in which the Chinese government on September 7, 1901, granted to the United States and other powers whose legations were besieged in the Boxer uprising the right, as the State Department last night described it, "to station at certain points forces for the maintenance of open communication between the capital (Peking) and the sea." Since 1901 the United States, with other interested governments, has maintained a legation guard at Peiping and since 1912 has kept a force at Tientsin.

Thus the decision to withdraw the Fifteenth Infantry entirely from Tientsin and to reduce by approximately one-half the Marine guard at Peiping in order to send a small force to Tientsin constitutes a change in the status quo of this country's relations with China as they existed prior to the Japanese attacks last July.

Whether this means that the United States Government has reversed its policy of seeking to maintain American rights in China and whether additional American armed forces will be withdrawn from China could not be ascertained last night. State Department attaches replied to all inquires by referring to the department's formal statement.

Although the destination of the Fifteenth Infantry when it leaves China was not announced, it was reported that the troops would be sent to Fort Lewis in the State of Washington.

FarmBill Livestock Clause Is Assailed

Atlanta, Feb. 4 (AP).—A group of southern agricultural leaders contended here today farmers should be allowed to use diverted farm acres to raise dairy or livestock products.

Several assailed as "ridiculous" an amendment to the Farm Bill under which a farmer would have lost benefit payments if he used diverted land to raise dairy, livestock or poultry products for market.

Farm Bill Wins Dual Approval In Compromise

Farm

bacco and rice—the bill would permit imposition of marketing quotas in 1938 on any of the crops except rice. Wheat quotas could be invoked this year only if parity payments were made.

Points at which marketing quotas could be invoked were compromised by the conferees between the more drastic Senate provisos and the moderate House proposals. For example, when supplies of wheat reached 940,000,000 bushels, the Secretary of Agriculture could proclaim a surplus, and publish crop control quotas. These would have to be approved by two-thirds of the wheat farmers on a referendum before they could be enforced.

The surplus point at which marketing quotas could be proclaimed on cotton was placed at 19,500,000 bales, and on corn at 2,700,000,000 bushels.

Penalties Reduced.

Penalties for sales over quotas likewise were cut far below the steep Senate fines, but were higher than House penalties. The penalty for over-quota wheat and corn sales would be 15 cents a bushel on each. The cotton penalty would be 2 cents a pound in 1938, and 3 cents for every year thereafter.

One feature of the conference compromise is a system for graduated increases in soil conservation benefit payments to all farmers receiving $200 or less in benefit checks, and a "ceiling" of $10,000 on all individual benefit payments.

Conferees said the new scale would mean larger benefit checks to approximately 85 per cent of all farmers, one-third of whom now receive $20 or less. Ten per cent of the bill's total appropriations would be set aside for these increases. Largest increase, under the new scale, would go to farmers receiving less than $20, whose checks would be bolstered 40 per cent.

Mandatory commodity loans ranging between 52 per cent and 75 per cent of "parity," are provided in the report. Corn loans would be mandatory when the price fell below 75 per cent of parity, and cotton loans when the price fell to 52 per cent. Rates would be left to the discretion of the Secretary.

Erwin Canham Heads Overseas Writers' Group

Franklyn Waltman Elected Secretary, Paul Wooton Is Treasurer.

Erwin D. Canham, chief of the Washington bureau of the Christian Science Monitor, yesterday was elected president of the Overseas Writers as the annual luncheon meeting of that organization. He succeeds Carroll H. Kenworthy, of the United Press, who served for the last two years.

Franklyn Waltman, chief of the national news bureau of The Washington Post, was elected secretary for the next year, and Paul Wooton, Washington correspondent of the McGraw-Hill publications and the New Orleans Times-Picayune, was re-elected treasurer. Oswald F. Schuette, former foreign correspondent, was elected to the executive committee.

Canham has had a broad experience as a writer dealing with international affairs. For several years prior to his appointment in 1932 as the Monitor's correspondent here he served that newspaper in a similar capacity at Geneva. He also covered for the Monitor the 1933 World [illegible] and Monetary Confesence at London. He was a Rhodes scholar to Oxford University and is a member of the Gridiron Club.

The Overseas Writers is an organization of Washington newspapermen who have engaged in foreign correspondence for American newspapers. It holds periodical luncheon meetings for the discussion of international problems, usually having some outstanding figure in diplomacy or foreign affairs as a speaker. It also entertain foreign journalists on their visits to Washington.

Aged Lunatic Kills Three Who 'Called Names'

Giant, 79, Wounds Two Other Infirmary Inmates With Pistol.

By the Associated Press.

Tewksbury, Mass., Feb. 4.—Firing as he ran from bed to bed, a giant inmate today killed three patients of the Tewksbury State Infirmary who called him "bad names."

He wounded two others.

Three hours after he fled down an infirmary fire escape, John Mack, 79, who stands 6 feet 3 inches, was picked up by police in Lowell, near the hospital, and three charges of murder placed against him.

Capt. John F. Stokes, chief of State detectives, said Mack had saved his "tobacco money" for two years to buy the pistol from a New York mail order house.

Early today Mack dressed quietly and feigned sleep until the ward attendant left the room.

Seizing the pistol, he shot Joseph O'Donnell, 55, in the back. He ran lightly across the aisle and fired a bullet into the abdomen of James Magee, 78. John Lewis, 76, in a bed adjoining Magee's, was the next victim.

Without pausing to see the effect of his shots, Mack ran to an adjoining ward, where he fired on Michael O'Keefe, 68, and Edward Mercier, 70. Then he fled.

O'Keefe, Magee and Mercier died. Lewis was not expected to live, and O'Donnell's condition was critical.

Rental on HOLC Homes Rose 27.9 Pct. Last Year

By the Associated Press.

An increased demand for homes in lower-cost brackets brought a rise of 27.9 per cent in 1937 in the average rentals of homes owned by the Home Owners Loan Corporation. The agency yesterday said the average rental rose from $20.92 a month January 1, 1937 to $26.75 December 31, 1937.

The Federal Diary

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

"Never Say the End."

J. Edgar Hiatt, chief clerk, Warrant Officer Section, A. G. O., was recently retired after more than 44 years' service. He has penned some lines, from which we quote at random:

"I've worked within these granite walls near five and forty years,
And now twilight on me falls, and eventide appears;
Olde Father Time with rampant speed has lobbied, so I'm told,
'Till Congress has by Act decreed that I am growing old;
But then the Supreme Court, 'tis true,
has very plainly said
Some things that Congress tried to do are just the same as dead;
And who is wise enough to know, or who will dare to say
But what this is another show just like the NRA?

"So if I'm crowded off the scene because of wrinkled brow,
Because a few gray hairs are seen, I make this solemn vow:
The wrinkles shall not bother me, the gray hairs I'll ignore,
For I can very plainly see that life has many more Important things for me to do—though not for Uncle Sam—
And I am telling this to you who'll soon be where I am,
Unless the rule of life is changed and age transposes youth,
And things become so rearranged that falsehood stands for truth.

"The leaving scenes of earnest toil through five and forty years
Will make the very soul recoil, and threaten many tears;
And when this comradeship has ceased
I then could grope about Like some one at a wedding feast when all the lights go out,
Or like a watchman charged to keep the treasure of a king,
Sits down at once and goes to sleep and loses everything.
I'd rather be a watchman who keeps wide awake instead,
And to his trust remaineth true, while there's more of life ahead."

Hiatt came to Washington from New Castle, Ind., and, arriving here on April 26, 1893, took office in the Ford Theater Building. While serving in the correspondence and examining division, he was transferred to the State, War and Navy Building on November 3, 1909. At that time, the A. G. O.'s office was called the record and pension office, later designated the military secretary's office, and subsequently the Adjutant General's Office. So far as his poem goes, he made a good try at it. No one could, with any emotional preciseness, say the end as it must be felt after 44 years.

DO YOU KNOW WHO DEPARTMENT—The subject yesterday was Roy Miller, an editor in Agriculture Department. Today we introduce a young lady in Interior, as follows:

Born in Boston, brought up in Los Angeles; intended being a dancer, but started winning in public speaking contests and shunted off to the U. of California to major in speech. One of the original organizers of the Young Democrats Clubs in California; was State chairman of education for the Young Democrats; from 1925 to 1935 was on the dramatic staff of Warner Bros. radio station KFWB, Hollywood. She once wrote a woman's program called "Through the Looking Glass With Alice of the Air." Is well known in local drama circles, and still has some of the old hankering to be an archeologist; once modeled shoes and wears very high heels. She likes odd shades, off-tones of blue and green and violet—and nearly always wears a wide silver seventeenth century Persian wedding ring. (We'll give her name Monday.)

"Stengle urges shorter hours for D. C. jail," says a Government Standard headline—and he wasn't thinking of the hours as they may occur to the prisoners. He was thinking of the guards, the personnel who do a 7-day week and don't have time to go to lunch. And whose salaries, he said, are much lower than those paid by the Prison Bureau for handling the same type of prisoners. And the correction: With 12 more employes the jail could institute a 5½-day week.

OFF HOURS: The United Civil Service employes social hour will be held Friday night in the Y. W. C. A. assembly hall. E. Claude Babcock, U. C. S. E. president, will speak, and A. Ahrens, of a steamship line, will give an illustrated travel lecture. Members and their friends are invited . . . The Massachusetts Society will hold a formal Valentine dancing party Thursday evening, February 17, in the main ballroom of the Wardman Park. The ladies committee, headed by Miss Alva Tyler, is in charge. Tonight the Massawa Town Meeting Club holds an old-fashioned bean supper . . . The pictures to be shown at the first performance of the Union Playhouse (sponsored by Agriculture branch, Local 2, N. F. F. E., Thursday night, February 17, Agriculture Auditorium) will be: "The Building of Boulder Dam" (Interior picture), "Flood Weather and Stop Forest Fires" (Agriculture productions). Dr. Bauer's Agriculture Orchestra will play; there will be three additional acts of entertainment. Joseph A. Hayes (GAO) will be master of ceremonies; William Wondrowitz (GAO) will head the door attendants and Miss Katherine Willson (Vets) will chairman the usherettes. Lee H. Shugar directs the program.

Add this to our Old Meanie department: The girl (Interior) has just bought some new ski togs, she has even bought some skis; and occasionally she flings a look from the window on a Washington winter that is snowless; and she thinks of her skis. From a nearby office another person, who cares not at all for skiing, writes with serene indifference:

"Lassen Volcanic National Park . . . is open to the public after all. Twenty inches of solidly packed snow covers the practice slopes at the checking station . . . The snow pack at Lake Helen is estimated to be 5 feet in depth." Forlorn lady, with the new togs and skis. Maybe February yet will whiten your dreams.

Silvershirts Amend Plea Against La Follette Unit

In an amended petition filed in District Court yesterday the Silvershirt Legion of America deleted many passages in its original complaint, which attributed "pro-Communist" influences to the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee and alleged some committee investigators couldn't speak English.

The Silvershirts are seeking to avoid responding to a subpena served upon Spencer J. Warwick, of Ohio, who was asked to appear and bring records and correspondence for perusal of the La Follette Committee.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

Finding the right discards seems to be one of the most vexatious problems confronting the average player. At times he deserves sympathy, because the greatest experts occasionally experience equal difficulty. Usually, however, there is an unmistakable guide to the proper choice, and then it is simply a case of locating that guide. In today's hand, as in so many, it was to be found in the bidding.

South, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.

	♠ 10 6 3 ♡ Q 6 ◇ A Q J 4 ♣ J 10 5 4
♠ A 8 4 2 ♡ J 10 9 7 ◇ 9 6 2 ♣ 9 6	North West East South	♠ Q J 9 5 ♡ 5 4 3 2 ◇ 8 5 ♣ 7 3 2
	♠ K 7 ♡ A K 8 ◇ K 10 7 3 ♣ A K Q 8

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
3 N T	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	4 N T	Pass
6 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

Six clubs, in my opinion, would have been a better final bid for South to make, but, due to the particular distribution of the combined hands, it would not have been any safer. West shrewdly decided against laying down his Ace which, it may be seen, would have made 12 tricks laydown. Instead, he chose the heart Jack. Dummy's Queen won and the four diamond tricks were cashed. On the latter two, East discarded two hearts; West, on the last round, a low spade. The Ace, King and Queen of clubs then were cashed. West was in no trouble up to this point—he let go another spade. But when declarer then led his low club toward dummy's Jack, West started to squirm. It was obvious that he could not decide whether to let go another spade or a heart. As he afterward tried to explain to his steaming partner, he was afraid that South had started out with the Ace-King and two low hearts—he pointed out that he could not know East still had the heart five. At any rate, he decided to guard the heart suit and hence had to blank the spade Ace. When a low spade was led from dummy and East played the nine, it did not require much guessing on declarer's part to duck, instead of putting up the King. West, by his three spade discards and, more important, by his squirming had virtually advertised that he had blanked the spade Ace in order to hold a heart stopper. The slam, of course, then became a laydown.

One simple little point should have made it easy for West to select the proper discards. Declarer had jumped to three notrump directly over his partner's noncommittal response of one diamond. It was inconceivable that he would have made that bid with three four-card suits and a singleton spade, even though it were the King! This reasoning alone should have been the only guide West needed.

Narrowing The Issue.

Perhaps the strangest aspect of the controversy over the anti-lynching bill is the fact that the chief address in defense of the measure came after its assailants had been filibustering for four weeks. Senator Wagner's recent illness may explain his delay in taking the floor. But surely some other sponsor could have presented the case for the bill at an earlier date.

Senator Wagner's address was significant because it narrowed the scope of the controversy. The same arguments presented three or four weeks ago would have made the time-consuming speeches of many Southern orators appear even more inappropriate. For the Senator from New York recognizes the universal abhorrence of lynching. And he has not overlooked the fact that recent progress has been made in curbing that barbarous practice.

The two basic points on which Senator Wagner and opponents of the measure seem to be at variance are its constitutionality and its probable effects upon the States. Since Mr. Wagner presented his able argument that the fourteenth amendment gives Congress authority to penalize local officials and taxpayers for failure to enforce anti-lynching laws impartially, Senator Borah has put in a powerful blow on the other side. The fourteenth amendment does give Congress broad power. Yet, as Senator Borah pointed out, the separation of State and Federal powers so that one government will not encroach upon the domain of the other, is the very basis on which the Constitution is built.

The Senate is not likely to reach a definitive conclusion on this constitutional issue. Nor is that necessary to dispose of the anti-lynching bill. Congress has many powers which its judgment forbids it to exercise. Certainly this is a case in which discretion and common sense should take precedence over legalistic arguments.

It is in discussing the effects of the measure that Senator Wagner's argument is particularly weak. He insists that it would permit Congress to "stand behind the States" as a guarantor of individual rights and privileges. The quoted phrase is significant. With such a measure on the statute books, the Federal Government would "stand behind the States," but with a blacksnake in its hand to whip local officials into line with national legislation.

No amount of argument can make this bill appear as a harmless co-operative measure. Such a bill could be drawn, perhaps after the pattern of the anti-kidnaping act. But the Wagner-Van Nuys bill is coercive and dictatorial. By assuming that it is only a move to help localities eager to rid themselves of lynching Senator Wagner has given his own case away.

Despite yesterday's vote against laying the bill aside, a growing dislike for its coercive methods will probably induce the Senate to displace it by more vital legislation in the near future.

Marine Labor Problems.

In a recent Senate committee hearing Joseph P. Kennedy, still chairman of the Maritime Commission, expressed the opinion that government ownership and operation of the merchant marine may soon become inevitable. To no small degree the outcome in this respect hinges on the question of whether or not a solution can be found for the labor troubles that afflict the industry. For without the development of order and discipline on American merchant ships the outlook for restoration of the private shipping industry will be well-nigh hopeless.

This being the situation it may be questioned whether spokesmen for the maritime unions are well-advised in opposing the Maritime Commission's proposals for setting up a board to mediate disputes in the shipping industry, similar to that provided under the railway labor act. The legislative representative for the National Maritime Union protests that legislation of this type cannot be forced down the throats of the seamen. The contention is that seamen would be robbed of their right to strike before they are well organized.

As a matter of fact, the lack of a firmly established unionism among maritime workers is a principal cause of the innumerable strikes and labor disturbances that have helped to bring the American merchant marine to its present low estate. And the right to strike will certainly not be advanced if present chaotic conditions force the Government to take over and run the ships. A system of government ownership and operation would inevitably entail penalties for such mutinous and near mutinous demonstrations as we have witnessed in recent years.

It must be realized that the Maritime Commission does not propose compulsory arbitration of disputes. It simply asks for the creation of a Federal agency to which appeals for mediation might be addressed. Failing agreements through mediation, arbitration might be resorted to as under the railway labor act, but only by consent of the disputants. Provision would also be made for investigation into the facts, during which time both strikes and lockouts would be prohibited. The success of such legislation would of course be more assured if the maritime unions were well organized and fully responsible, so the suggestion cannot possibly be regarded as hostile to labor.

The Maritime Commission fully appreciates the difficulties confronting any Federal agency in trying to keep the peace under present conditions in the merchant marine. But in view of the pressing nature of the emergency created by constant conflicts it concludes that "immediate affirmative action" is called for. Secretary Perkins testifying yesterday before the Senate Commerce Committee insisted that the shipping industry is not yet ready for a mature labor policy, such as now rules in the railroad industry. But the paramount question is whether it ever will be ready unless effective mediation machinery is wholeheartedly sponsored by both ship owners and seamen.

Communism And Trade Unions.

The American Federation of Labor grew to power under the leadership of Samuel Gompers, who firmly believed that the organized labor movement would progress faster by refusing to become involved in purely political activities. If the organization indorsed a particular candidate for office, it was always understood that it did so because the man in question was friendly to labor. Both praise and condemnation were bestowed without regard to party labels.

Although trade unions are today becoming much more conscious of their political strength, and although some of their leaders are much more political-minded than formerly, they are still non-partisan in the sense that their members often belong to different parties and hold opposed political beliefs. It is an open question whether this political neutrality of organized labor has strengthened or weakened the labor movement. But there is little reason to doubt that it has saved us from the kind of political contests in which class is arrayed against class, labor against capital, employer against employe. The disruptive effect of a political stratification of this sort upon our democratic institutions is easily imagined.

In view of the established practice of refusing to mix politics with trade unionism, it seems at first glance that the admission of Communists to trade union membership ought not to present any especial problem. Certainly the liberal-minded individual should feel an instinctive repugnance to exclusionist policies depriving workers of the privileges of trade union membership merely because they are professed Communists. It may be argued, quite plausibly that it is as unfair to exclude a man because of his communistic beliefs as it would be to disqualify him for being a Republican or a Democrat.

Proceeding on that theory, some unions today refuse to make any distinction between Communists and non-Communists. Others, notably the United Mine Workers, the largest C. I. O. affiliate, definitely bar Communists from membership. A third group favors a compromise plan which admits Communists as union members but prohibits them holding office and influencing union policies.

Homer Martin, head of the United Automobile Workers Union, has just offered a strong defense of this middle-of-the-road method of dealing with the genuinely perplexing problem presented by Communist infiltration into the unions. Under this plan Communists would not be excluded from enjoying the benefits of trade unionism. They would simply be prevented from using trade union organizations as agencies for spreading communistic propaganda.

Trade unions organized for the purpose of bettering conditions for their members within the existing economic and social framework are in duty bound to protect themselves against subversive elements desiring to overthrow the existing order. The revolutionary social thinker, the advocate of communism for instance, is under no obligation to observe the rules of the industrial game as it is played today in this country. It is his desire to upset those rules and make the present economic system unworkable. Thus, although some Communists may refrain from disruptive action, many others feel it their mission to make trouble for constituted authorities. According to Mr. Martin, they have tried in many cases to demoralize the trade unions, to undermine the position of union leaders by inciting workers to go on unauthorized strikes, and to cause violation of agreements with employers.

If such charges are true—and there seems abundant evidence to support them—it would be foolhardy for union members who prefer a democratic to a communistic form of government to erect no barriers against the capture of their organizations by Communists. Action of this sort taken by private groups is simply protective. It is not in any sense a denial of any constitutional rights.

But What Of The Slums?

Since the law grants so large a measure of discretion to the United States Housing Authority, the shaping of its policy will be the more attentively watched.

There was widespread approval when Administrator Straus recently accepted "the leadership in the battle to raze the slums" and announced that public housing under his control would be built at minimum costs so that funds available would accommodate the largest possible number of families. In his address before the Architectural League of New York, however, some less promising aspects of the policy apparently to be followed were revealed.

As finally adopted by Congress, the housing authority act was undoubtedly aimed directly at the slums. It confines annual subsidies for low-rental housing to projects including the elimination of an equivalent number of insanitary or unsafe dwellings. Such demolition of slums may be "deferred" only in case of a housing shortage "so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding." Enactment this week of the private housing bill, with its stimulus to large-scale projects for families of relatively small income, further emphasizes the intention of Congress to strike directly at the slums in its subsidized program.

In his New York speech, however, Mr. Straus indicated that preference will be given to projects utilizing large areas of vacant land in outlying areas. "This will, as a rule," he is quoted as saying, "exclude use of land in the slums of our cities which is usually held at high prices." It is generally agreed that some of the land now occupied by slums should not be redeveloped for housing purposes. But the USHA has no authority to divert such land to other purposes. How, then, under this policy are the slums to be eliminated?

Mr. Straus dismissed the slum-clearance provision with the comment: "This will be adhered to as strictly as possible, except in cases where there is a shortage." Experience indicates that there is not much hope of actually draining slum areas by simply providing new dwellings in different localities. So long as hovels stand in congested sections they are likely to be occupied. And even if further use is forbidden, they are left as eyesores.

Generous subsidies were provided by Congress under the public housing act largely because of the expense of wiping out slums. If these funds should be used only for the construction of low-rental houses on vacant land, the larger problem of reclaiming blighted urban areas would seem to be slated for indefinite postponement.

The Straus policy of encouraging two-story duplex or row houses, as opposed to large apartments, bears evidence of careful study. This type of dwelling is cheaper to build; cheaper to operate, and is generally more satisfactory from the family viewpoint. Experience in Great Britain indicates that a group home with garden can be provided at two-thirds the cost of a tenement dwelling. Various experiments in this country tend to confirm that view.

It does not follow, however, that this type of project must be built in outlying areas. Some English authorities with years of experience in this field point to the desirability of housing workers of low income near to their work, which is usually close to the center of large cities. The difficulty of inducing such families to move to the outskirts ought to be carefully investigated before the policy of the USHA is definitely fixed.

More important, however, is the problem of effectively reclaiming slum areas, assuming that most of the authority's funds are to be used for new housing on vacant land. A further explanation on this point from Mr. Straus is obviously desirable.

What Price Audit?

The country will of course give wholehearted approval to the allotment of $85,867, authorized by the President, to enable the Works Progress Administration to study the value of the tourist trade to Florida. It is what everybody wants to know, Floridians most of all. It may even be that the tourists themselves would like a little information.

If there is any complaint anywhere it will be about the smallness of the appropriation. To do the job thoroughly it would be necessary to know just how much every tourist had when he entered the State and how much he had left when he departed. But with a beggardly eighty-five-thousand-odd the Government may have to content itself with learning what lump sums were left with hotels and boarding houses, race tracks and slot machines, which will leave something to be desired.

But even though financially hampered, the study is almost bound to do some good. If Florida is losing money on her tourists she ought to be put wise to the fact so that she may go into the steel or coal business or something equally profitable and free from Government interference and labor troubles.

The one danger, as we see it, is that some passionate reformer will use the WPA investigation as an excuse for trying to improve the breed of tourists, insisting that they all be good citizens with a proper idea of economy and a strong desire for quiet and sedate living. This might easily come to mean restraint of trade at Hialeah.

Businessmen's Convention.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer has for the last two days attended the so-called businessmen's convention in the Commerce Building auditorium. Of all the conventions I have ever seen, it caps them all. It reminded me more of a Kilkenny cat fight than a convention of sane businessmen.

I did not hear one word of praise for any act of the Administration or Congress during the last five years. No reference to the bank insurance act; not one word about the relief of the farmers nor the billions that have been spent for the WPA, PWA, CCC; help given to banks, railroads, insurance companies and building and loan associations; nor the purchasing power that has been put into the hands of the people and has benefited all classes and conditions, including the small businessmen; nor for the increase of our foreign trade.

The whole burden of their song seemed to be, "I am agin the Administration." I think what they really want is for the Government to repeal all taxes and all restrictions on business and banks and utilities and to turn the country over to the same men that wrecked it in 1929. If there was any opposition to their views, it was silent.

If this convention represents the attitude of the businessmen of the Nation, I see little use of their wasting their time and money coming to Washington to see the President.

WITCHER.

Washington, Feb. 3.

The South's Leaders.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Intelligent Southerners, white and Negroes, are disgusted with the leadership forced upon the people below the Mason and Dixon line. With few exceptions this leadership is not of the people's choosing, and we are ashamed of it. There are few newspapers in the South that speak an editorial word in defense of the anti-lynching bill filibuster.

Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy and Soviet Russia may not govern according to the patterns of democratic nations, but dictatorships are seldom given to hypocrisy—a dictator would not lessen his ego by mouthing phrases of liberty and democracy if he ruled a country as the South is ruled today. Pride would not permit a dictator to assume that he was a Christian and a Democrat when the existence of lynching and economic slavery would indicate the absurdity of such a possibility within a region where lynching and slavery were part of the national scene.

There can be no honor in the South until there is honesty—at the present time there is neither.

Another View Of Ulster.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If Charles Edward Russell and Andrew I. Hickey are so interested in the "Ulster Election" (see letter to the editor of The Post of February 2), why in the name of common sense don't they go back to Ireland, where they belong, and do something about it? We have entirely too many hyphenated Americans over here now.

Take it from one who knows Ireland from the northern tip of Ulster to Bantry Bay in the south, that "North is North and South is South and never the twain shall meet," to paraphrase Kipling. The two sections are as different temperamentally, physiologically, and religiously as is China from Japan.

This writer holds no brief for England, though he is of English descent with ten generations of good Americans behind him (and not one hyphenated) and yet he knows, as every student of history knows, that if it had not been for the strong arm of England in the last 300 years, the little turbulent country known as Ireland would have been "gobbled up" by one or more of the countries of Europe.

Truly, England has been the salvation of Ireland.

To Protect Animals.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to H. R. 7295, a bill to protect animals against misuse and abuse in medical laboratories, last week I had the opportunity of attending a congressional hearing of the Animal Defense Society, Inc. I was most favorably impressed by the testimony presented by the society.

The evidence presented was strong and convincing. The witnesses, who comprised doctors of high standing and long practice in the profession of medicine, testified as to the futility of using animals for this purpose as the chemistry of the animal is so different from that of man, and mentioned the little—almost nothing—that has been accomplished by this method, proving that it is a wrong one.

It is sincerely hoped that this humane bill will soon be passed and become a law in the District of Columbia and eventually in the entire United States. There is nothing new or unusual about a bill of this kind, protecting the rights of animals, as long ago such a bill was passed in England and is now a law in Great Britain.

Miss Perkins' Letter.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post featured on its front page of February 3 the claim of certain seamen that Labor Secretary Perkins is their ally in their hostility to legislation recommended by the Maritime Commission. To support his claim Ralph Emerson, labor leader, quotes a letter written by Secretary Perkins April 30, 1937, to the chairman of the House committee hearing testimony on a mediation bill.

Mr. Emerson omitted the most valuable paragraph in the letter from the Labor Secretary in which she said:

In shipping more perhaps than in any other industry, workers are in constant contact with the citizens of other countries, and it would be unfortunate if, when properly elected, they (the aliens) were to be excluded from the service of the workers and of the industry as a whole.

Music For Women.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was present at a concert recently and was surprised to find that with the exception of the opening item none of the choral pieces were original compositions for female voices, but were, in most instances, arranged from works of Russian composers which were not primarily written for a chorus of the higher voices. There is such a quantity of really fine music written for women's voices that it is pardonable to wonder why we can't be favored with a chance to hear some of these pieces.

A General View Of Holding Companies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A recent letter in The Post refers to holding companies as parasites, and expresses the opinion that such companies could well be abolished. I think the letter should be supplemented in aid of a better understanding. I have no special interest in any holding company, but believe that a full view of all relevant facts is necessary to a proper solution of our economic problems.

Corporations, like individuals, unless restrained by law, competitive forces, or common sense, may do evil. So with holding companies, which are corporations which own the stock of other corporations, and through such ownership frequently control them. They are not necessarily parasites, but may use their control in the interest of the operating companies and of the public. Independent utility corporations may, and often do, operate inefficiently and uneconomically. In contrast, under the direction and control of a common controlling corporation, policies may be reformed, new and more efficient methods adopted, and economies effected, to the benefit of both security holders and patrons.

Of course, public utility corporations, which usually have a monopoly of a particular service in a particular territory, may seek to take advantage of that fact by fixing their rates above a just level or by failing to provide proper equipment or service. This is true whether the majority of their stock is held by an individual or a holding company. Protection from such dangers is sought in the establishment of intelligent and fair public utilities commissions. Having very extensive authority over the affairs of the operating corporations, including their accounting, the commissions are in position to determine all the facts necessary to just decisions as to the propriety of the rates charged and the reasonableness of the services rendered. These are the matters of primary importance to patrons. If the rates are reasonable and afford the operating company only a fair return, it is unimportant whether its dividends are paid to a holding corporation or to stockholders of some other class.

Our local situation offers an illustration of the distinction often found in the public mind between the acts of a corporation and the similar acts of an individual. Our electric company and our transit company are under potential control of the same holding company. At present, one of the operating companies earns dividends, the other does not. It is urged by some that the holding company should come to the assistance of the transit company; but if the majority stocks were owned by an individual no one would suggest that he was under either legal or moral obligation to use the dividends received from the electric company in relieving the necessities of the transit company, unless it were shown that the common control had something to do with the prosperity of the one and the lack of prosperity of the other. In my judgment, the low earnings of the transit company are amply explained without reference to ownership of its stock.

Remainders.

THERE are a thousand wrinkles in his high shoes, and they have been half-soled so many times that the upper leather is beginning to pull away; but he keeps them shined just as he keeps his suit pressed, his shirt collar ironed, however frayed it may be, and his hat in shape, no matter how old it it. His face is always smooth, and his gray mustache is evenly trimmed.

It takes him longer than you would think to slay like this. Furtive midnight washings of shirts, socks and underwear in the bathtub, drying them on a radiator in winter and on a line strung across his room in summer. Sometimes the clothes don't dry in one night, and he has to take them down, line and all, to hide them from the landlady, then put them up again the next night. The landlady usually knows all about it, but she is careful not to let him see that she knows. The ironing is just as furtive. Sometimes he does it with his own electric iron, when he has one; sometimes with an iron borrowed from another roomer. Of course he never tells them he wants to iron clothes. Then there are neckties to be cleaned with benzine, socks to be carefully darned, razor blades to be stropped on the inside of water glasses.

He is not very tall, but straight. His quick walking, his mustache, and his grave, lined face without glasses make you think of a retired Army officer, although he has never seen any service. He was a mining engineer until 1929, and he tells stories that make the noisiest magazines seem anemic, stories of caveins in Sonora, rescue squads digging till they collapse, dead men brought out with no wounds but with purple faces; of peon revolts in Chihuahua; of Bloody Ludlow, where he quit when the Colorado National Guard began to shoot the camping strikers.

I don't know how he lived through the depression, for he won't beg or apply for relief. But if a man doesn't get enough to eat he will show it, and if he can't pay his rent the landlady will know if no one else does. And he's the kind of man that a lot of people like to do things for, simply because he never asks for anything.

He must have begun by pawning or selling his cuff links, stickpin, watch and ring; then his books and luggage, and at last his suits, taking them one by one, waiting as long as he could each time. After that he must have got along some way on odd jobs, invitations to meals, small loans. When he couldn't pay his rent, the landlady would smile, for a few weeks anyhow, and tell him it was all right because she knew he would never try to beat her out of it.

Then the PWA gave him a job. It paid him more than he needed to live the way he had been living the past few years, but he kept on washing his clothes, shining his shoes, eating sandwiches and milk in his room, until he had paid all that he owed. At first he had to borrow from the men he worked with (they offered it to him, he never asked for it), so it took him two months to get all his debts paid.

He had been living in a narrow back room with mouldy wallpaper and cockroaches, paying $10 a month for it; but when his debts were paid, he moved to a room that cost twice as much, in a better part of the city. It was at the front of the second floor, large with bright new wallpaper, a soft bed, reading lamps and a semi-private bath. At the same time he ordered two suits from a tailor, and when he began to wear them, the men who worked with him wondered how and why he did it. He stopped doing his own laundry, too; and he bought a few of his favorite books, the Waverly novels, "Dombey and Son," "Les Miserables," "The Master of Ballantrae" and "The Age of Reason."

The job lasted only a few months, and he had to move back into the kind of room that he had before, sell his new suits, wash his clothes at midnight, eat in his room when no one invited him out; but neither his face nor his walk ever changed.

Tightwad, Henry County, Mo., whose business houses comprise two stores and a blacksmith shop, nestled away in the heart of America, now proudly possesses a great white way furnished by the light plants owned by Frank Sargert, merchant on the right side of the road, and Ray Parks, the other merchant. Instead of passing through in darkness, motorists now pass through in a blazing path of light, for with the white way, Tightwad no longer retires at dusk. The town no longer is off the map, despite its approach over rocky hill and forded dale.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

"Spike" O'Donnell.

Chicago.

"SPIKE" O'DONNELL is thinking of having his memoirs done, and at this moment might be described as a book in search of an author.

Mr. O'Donnell was in beer in Chicago during the exciting time of prohibition and served as clay pigeon in many exciting shooting fests. The fact that he is alive today and without a wound to show for his service in the wars is a disgusting commentary on the marksmanship of many of his famous contemporaries.

PEGLER.

By his own count he was shelled on eleven separate occasions, and there is no disputing the fact that he twice came through attacks at close quarters combining the fire of machine guns and blunderbusses which tossed out such home-made shrapnel as screws, bolts, bent nails and fragments of sash weights.

On another occasion some business rivals drove slowly past his happy home (selecting, with fine chivalry an hour when the kids have gone to bed) and splattered it with bullets which left marks in the dining room and kitchen—marks preserved to this day with pride as souvenirs of a more strenuous and altogether happier period of his life. After he is gone these marks will maintain his honor, refuting foul rumors that his enemies shot blanks.

POLITICALLY, something has happened to Mr. O'Donnell, and he is sad beneath the garrulous nonchalance with which he salutes old friends. Three years running, on the day before Christmas Eve, the Chicago cops have picked him up and held him in the bucket, as he says, for 24 hours, at a time when a man wants to be doing his Christmas shopping. They have released him just in time to go home empty-handed. They have picked him up at various other times, too, and always for nothing.

Mr. O'Donnell is out of action entirely, which is strange, because there is plenty of action in Chicago and other men, less worthy, are doing very well in coal, horse books, insurance and other standard branches of business through which the local statesmen traditionally take care of their own. It is a mystery to him, the more depressing because Mr. Roosevelt's and Mr. Farley's friend Ed Kelly, the Mayor, was always polite to him up to a certain point. Wasn't it "Spike" O'Donnell who offered solace to Mr. Kelly the time Mr. Kelly was indicted, with the homely philosophical remark that an Irishman can't consider himself a real politician until he has been indicted?

"It is like being confirmed," Mr. O'Donnell told Mr. Kelly.

What about organizing a labor union? That has always been a reliable business for a man of Mr. O'Donnell's talents.

"Labor?" Mr. O'Donnell replied. "It is so long since they built anything in this town that if you had a steam shovel you could charge admission to see it work."

• • • •

NO, there is nothing doing in labor, but if a man could only get a little capital and start a big place where all the city and county officials and the sports and sightseers could come—like Dempsey's in New York—that would be something. Or that book—"The Life and Battles of 'Spike' O'Donnell."

But when Mr. O'Donnell starts reciting his memoirs to a ghost for posterity's sake he chokes up. He is jerked about by his desire to tell a story and make a fortune as an author—how much did that girl make out of "Gone With the Wind?"—and the cultivated reticence of a man whose trade regards it as a capital crime to blow the whistle.

He speaks of "a certain party" and "Mister Smith" and "this Jones," and when he comes to the mention of men dead who wanted his life in the heat of competition those few short years ago he softens their memory and speaks no ill, sometimes lifting his hat off his moist and half-naked scalp to say: "God rest his soul! He wasn't so bad." He speaks thus of Frankie McErlane, telling of the time that Frankie let fly at him with a shotgun which shot flame like the mouth of a blast furnace.

• • • •

MANY, MANY old friends and enemies are dead and gone—God rest their souls!—all but a few of those Eyetalians. And many of the survivors who once handled fabulous money and bought city officials and police captains as a precinct leader buys so many bums, though for higher prices, are now out of action and out of money, like "Spike." They thought it would last forever or certainly as long as they lasted, but abruptly repeal happened, politics shifted and many a good man is out.

Mr. O'Donnell's prohibition brewery is gone, too. He still defends the quality of his beer, swearing that he drew the water from a special well 1,800 feet down and never released the brew under seven days old. He still toys with a hope as to that well, for the water itself contained something stimulating, something that made people feel vigorous and young.

Thus "Spike" O'Donnell, the old clay pigeon who once counted his receipts in gees. It seems impossible and, somehow, not entirely right. It would have been more poetic if the last blast of scrapiron had got him.

Two Helpful Rules

By Joseph Fort Newton.

An Old Lady's Suggestions.

A DEAR LADY 89 years old taught me these two things which have helped me greatly. She learned them, she said, slowly and at great cost, and they prolonged her life.

One is that we must learn to forgive people for what they are, as well as for what they do, because what they do grows out of what they are. We cannot make people over. And if we could we might make them worse than they are. Besides, our buisiness is to make ourselves better and others happy. If only we attend to our own business, in this respect as well as in others, it will make for our peace and the happiness of our fellows.

The other thing is that we must wait and see what happens and not worry till it does happen. In nine cases out of ten the thing we are afraid of and worry about does not happen. But if it does happen, as it does at times, other things will happen, too, which will change the setting and modify the result, making a different picture from the one our fear paints. By a little effort we can learn the knack of putting things from us, throwing them off far enough to see them more clearly, and think of them as they matter—many things do not matter, and are not worth the bother of worrying.

Trade And Peace

British Capstone For Hull Reciprocal Program Will Provide At Least Psychological Brake On Restless Militarists.

By Livingston Hartley,

Special Correspondence of The Post.

THE EMPHASIS in American foreign policy has recently been placed on the growing structure of reciprocal trade agreements, which should soon be roofed and made really weather-proof by successful negotiations with the British government.

This new economic policy of Secretary Hull's has from its inception been designed to fulfill two distinct purposes: First, to increase international trade, and thereby create prosperity and a rising standard of living both here and abroad; second, to alleviate by this means international economic strains which are basic causes of war, and so contribute to the maintenance of peace.

Even those business interests who fear that Mr. Hull's policy may injure them personally, must admit that both these purposes are, to some extent, being served. Statistics show, for instance, that during the first 11 months of 1937, as compared with the corresponding period of 1936, exports to 14 trade agreement countries increased by 42.2 per cent, whereas those to all other countries only rose by 32.2 per cent. Such early results from this only partially completed program show a definite trend toward expansion of our foreign trade, which will provide our national producers with new markets abroad and endow our consumers with additional wealth in the foreign goods our enhanced exports buy.

Trade Pacts And Peace Seen Intimately Linked.

THE RELATION between trade agreements and the second purpose is not hard to see. If foreign countries are brought by them to increase their trade with us and with each other, their home industries will be more healthy; their unemployment will diminish, and their standard of living will rise. This will spell an era of contentment beneficial to peace, since prosperous peoples tend to scoff at the siren call of the militarist and the would-be dictator. It was the discontent produced by the depression that shattered the peaceful omens of the 'twenties, caused "Manchukuo" and Hitler; spread political reaction over much of Europe and South America, and forced Mussolini to wage the war he had threatened for 13 years.

The menace of Nazi Germany to Europe is primarily political, measured by the roar of Goering's planes and the busy furnaces of Krupp's. But the fundamental German question, which must be solved before Europe can enjoy a stable peace, is susceptible, perhaps, to an economic solution. If Germany could obtain the export markets she needs abroad through trade agreements, she would have no economic need to gain them by war or warlike threats. Her increased exports would allow her to import the raw materials she requires, and enable her to return again to economic and financial sanity. The economic motive for military expansion should lose its drive under these conditions in Rome and Tokyo as well as in Berlin.

We must not forget, however, that Germans, Italians and Japanese are far less economic-minded than Americans. As long as these aggressive great powers are controlled by militaristic, ambitious regimes, it is doubtful if they can be satisfied by economic gains alone. All three regimes have tied their prestige to expansionist aims, which armament expenditures, the blood of their peoples and relentless propaganda have now intertwined inextricably with their internal positions.

Prosperity Would Stifle Incitements Of Militarists.

NEVERTHELESS, the trade agreement policy offers, in theory, a solution to this problem also. If it works among the 90 per cent of the world which desires peace, it must, in the end, exert an irresistible influence upon the three powers which practice or threaten war.

Suppose, for example, that all European nations except Germany and Italy should enter whole-heartedly into Mr. Hull's program, reduce their barriers to mutual trade and increase their imports, exports, prosperity and standard of living. Their improved situation could not fail to cause a powerful reaction among the strained and impoverished peoples of the two dictatorships. These peoples would inevitably begin to long to join the bandwagon and find a place in the sun of the new prosperity. Popular opposition to the present policies of the fascist regimes would spread like a prairie fire, leading at last to a drastic change of either the policies or the regimes.

But there is one great flaw in this conception of the preservation of peace by trade agreements, the same flaw that has marred almost all of the post-war policies of the great democracies. That is the march of time, which does not wait for machinery which moves too slowly.

Stabilization of European peace through the influence of trade agreements must require many years, perhaps more than a decade. But the threat to peace in Europe is not distant but imminent, as the increasing tempo of universal rearmament indicates. A majority of observers now feel that Europe is headed for another war between great powers, exceedingly liable to become world-wide and involve the United States. Few who feel this way would place the date of that war as far ahead as the late 1940s.

So if trade agreements promise in the end to bring us to stabilized peace, something more is needed to preserve peace during the long and dangerous years which must measure their gradually accumulating influence. This brings us back to our most crucial issue in foreign policy, which we have refused to face squarely for over 17 years.

Economic Implementation Of Kellogg Pact Suggested.

THIS ISSUE might be decided now if our Government would take a firm stand in support of peace, which need not constitute an "entanglement" nor infringe upon our freedom of action in foreign affairs. Such a stand could consist of a joint resolution of Congress, empowering the President to restrict American economic and financial aid to any nation which, in the opinion of our Government, had violated the Kellogg pact.

There is no certainty in human affairs, but it seems virtually certain that the rulers of Germany and Italy would decide that war in Europe was an impracticable instrument of national policy if the United States should take this stand. And yet it is hard to see how such action by Congress could subject the United States to danger, since it is obvious that the President would only enforce such a "quarantine" if other nations were already restraining a war maker by concerted economic or military means.

As long as we will not take some adequate step in this direction to indicate in concrete terms our national interest in the maintenance of peace, our whole policy of peace through trade agreements must rest on a paper foundation, liable to be rent into shreds at any time by the bayonets of military autocracies.

Our most active contribution to peace today lies more in the field of psychology than in the slowly accumulating influence of trade agreements. Although insignificant when contrasted with the present world predominance of our country, and although accompanied with inter-governmental friction rather than good will, it served as an undoubted brake upon European governments whose policies are geared to war.

Our official pronouncements in defense of peace and treaties, human freedom and democracy, and the abhorrence of Fascist violence and German and Italian policies constantly expressed by our newspapers and public figures, cannot fail to have a strong psychological influence upon some very hard-boiled officials abroad.

The German and Italian general staffs are not oblivious to the attitude of America. They know that as a nation and a people we oppose the policies of their rulers. They see that their rulers have now adopted a position of hostility to democracy as well as to communism, regardless of the fact that we are the greatest democracy.

These hard-headed military men realize, moreover, that there is no deep faith among our statesmen that neutrality could be preserved in another long-drawn Eurasian war. They must, therefore, allow for the possibility that America might again be involved, recognizing clearly that we then should be an enemy, and remembering that we decided the balance last time.

Allowance for this possibility may make all the difference in their replies to their masters when questioned whether the time has come to strike. If the German general staff keeps on saying "No" to Hitler, the dreaded conflagration will be far less likely to occur.

That is why the stream of recriminations which flows back and forth across the Atlantic between our own great cities and Fascist Europe may serve a most useful purpose.

Show Of Force

By Barnet Nover

The Piracy Problem Again.

IN A RECENT column the writer sought to point out the relationship existing between the shift in the military balance of power in Spain as a consequence of the battle of Teruel and the present army crisis in Germany. But there is also a direct relationship between these events and the recrudescence of piracy in the Mediterranean.

Within the past week two British freighters have been sunk, one presumably by a torpedo from an underseas craft and the other by a bombing plane. Both of these ships, as it happened, were engaged in carrying non-contraband cargoes, as is proved by the presence on board of each of the vessels of an observer for the London non-intervention committee and the fact that each flew the committee's flag as well as the Union Jack.

It must be presumed, therefore, that those responsible for the sinking of these ships knew what they were about, but carried out their depredations regardless.

• • • •

THE REASON behind this action is not far to seek. If it were possible to starve out loyalist Spain the insurgent defeat at Teruel would be offset and victory for Franco, now indefinitely postponed, might be brought nearer. Certainly it is no secret that the Spanish government was very seriously imperiled when, last summer, submarine piracy and indiscriminate bombing of neutral shipping made travel in Spanish Mediterranean waters perilous in the extreme. Not only were many ships sunk, but many more ships were scared off.

Then came the Nyon parley. In the face of the ensuing show of force by Great Britain and France piracy ceased. But the presumption remained that Franco, by launching his long-expected offensive, would soon make himself master of all Spain.

The reality has proved otherwise. The war in Spain is not yet over, and the balance of military power, which some months ago definitely seemed to favor the insurgents, is now tipped in favor of the loyalists.

• • • •

NOT SURPRISINGLY, German army leaders, most of whom opposed the Spanish venture from the start, have now begun to ask themselves whether the time has not come for the Third Reich to liquidate its commitments in the Iberian peninsula, regardless of the effect such action might have on German-Italian relations.

Whether the army point of view will in this regard be adopted by Hitler or not remains to be determined. But for the Spanish insurgents and their ally, Mussolini, the possibility must now be taken into account that Germany may withdraw from Spain or at least not extend her interventionist efforts there.

In that event Mussolini might find himself out on a limb. Despite much loose talk on the subject it is by no means certain that he can afford to send enough additional Italian army units to Spain to win the war for Franco. It is enormously significant in this connection that few if any Italian soldiers appear to have participated in the crucial fighting at Teruel. If the war is to be won by the insurgents, it will have to be won not by the dispatch of additional Italian army corps, which may be too risky a procedure, but in some other fashion.

AN ATTACK on ships carrying supplies to loyalist Spain may have been decided on as at least an interim measure of great potential value. And since the democratic powers have so often in the past, bowed in the face of bullying tactics there was a possibility that they might do so again.

The reaction of Great Britain and France to the revival of piracy has, from this standpoint, been disillusioning to Franco's supporters. To be sure Anthony Eden, the British foreign secretary, did go through the motions of calling in not only the French but also the Italian ambassador and urging united action in meeting the piracy menace. But he did not for a moment suggest that the matter be turned over to the London non-intervention committee.

Before this body the Fascist powers practiced the art of delay with consummate skill. This time, apparently, the British have no stomach for such procedure. At Nyon, last September, they had discovered that they no less than the Fascists can get places by a determined show of force.

Indeed, without waiting for a reply from Italy the British proceeded to send a large flotilla of destroyers into the Mediterranean while the French government gave orders to its warships in that artery to sink prowling submarines on sight. Both powers, in addition, have decided to brook no attacks on their merchant ships by bombing planes of whatever nationality.

AGAIN AND AGAIN the London and Paris governments have, like the king of France in the fable, marched up the hill only to march down again.

It is perhaps much too early to say that this time the democratic powers will stay on the summit. But there is a very real possibility that this is precisely what will happen. For, after all, if the offending submarines are of Italian origin, Italy cannot openly acknowledge their nationality if they are sunk in places where they have no business to be. And if they are not Italian then, of course, Mussolini cannot object.

In the meantime there is every reason for Great Britain and France to consolidate their position in the Mediterranean while Germany makes up its mind. Is the democratic worm at last turning in a Europe harassed all-too-long by the dictators?

"Out Of Control."

President (on the phone)—Dan, haven't you got those small business men under control yet?

Roper—My right wing has been turned back, my left wing is under pressure, I am attacking all along the line.

President—I don't hear you distinctly.

Roper—With all these little fellows yelling at once I can't even hear myself. Whose idea was this, anyhow?

President—You sent out the invitations.

Roper—But I was acting under orders.

President—What's the matter with these small business men? Don't they trust me?

Roper—Say, Franklin, the motto over the counter in every small store in America is "No Trust."

President—The way they are behaving is most embarrassing. Haven't you told them everything is all right.

Roper—Yes, but they seem more skeptical than the big fellows.

President—I can't understand. Those big fellows stuck to the script, did everything as arranged and never once stole the show. And here are all these little fellows throwing everything but the kitchen sink at us. How do you explain it, Dan? Aren't the small fellows behind us?

Roper—They're behind us, in front of us, and on all sides of us. They've got us surrounded.

President—Be firm. Tell 'em they've got to play ball with me.

Roper—I did, but they all prefer ice hockey.

President—That's gratitude. Haven't I spent years cracking down on the big fellows and building up the little fellows?

Roper—Yes, but the trouble is no businessman wants to be considered as being too small. We made a mistake in violating an accepted conclusion of show business.

President—What conclusion was that, Dan?

Roper—The conclusion that nobody ever got anywhere with a midget show except Barnum.

President (nervously)—What's all that screaming?

Roper—They're opening another meeting.

President—Ask the chairman to rap for order.

Roper—The trouble is they're all chairmen.

President—We've got to break this up somehow. You never can tell how far a show of this kind may go. It might even win the Pulitzer prize from us. What seems to be the trouble in a nutshell?

Roper—As nearly as I can make out they contend that it is even more important for a dwarf to know where he is going and have a well-lighted road than it is for a giant.

President—What became of our plan to let them shoot off steam and then leave everything to a small committee of quiet little fellows who've read the book of etiquette?

Roper—You're asking me?

Chauffeurs' Ball.

DIGNITY was the watchword. The stiff-necked profession which bows ample dowagers into the White House, and draws up alongside only such revered hostelries as the Mayflower, held its annual ball this week in a downtown hotel.

McCARTHY.

The program informed that the ball was being held by the local "Private Chauffeurs Benevolent Association," and the whole proceeding threw new light on a mysterious profession.

In the first place, dignity was the keynote. Let the Georgetown freshmen do the Big Apple, let the residents of Southwest "Shag" and go in for the "Shenanigan," the chauffeurs of Washington remain true to their calling . . . they dance with dignity.

But if anyone had expected obsequiousness they were doomed to disappointment. Dignity, but no knuckling under, was the order of the day.

This column hied itself to a local hotel, tongue in cheek, to witness the annual ball, which once a year leaves Washington society bereft of its cars, and dependent upon taxicabs. But about a half an hour of the entertainment and the tongue was out of the cheek, and room was left only for admiration.

Let it be hereby recorded, Washington chauffeurs not only dance, but they do so with dignity, and verve.

"It's our big night," Tom Kilduff, strapping six-footer who drives for Representative Treadway, told me. "But there's no roughhouse. We do things in an orderly way."

And two of the gentlemen who had, for the night, exchanged whipcord uniforms for tuxedos nodded polite assent.

"We don't stand for rough stuff," said Charley Volkman, second vice president, "we even took out the bar!"

Chauffeurs, it appeared, are not only strait-laced as a profession, but observing of the more gracious gestures in their private lives. A bar had been set up in the main ball room, but when it had been discovered by the horrified dance committee it had, straightway, been withdrawn.

• • • •

BUT IF the dancing was not of the order which may be written up as news, and if the chauffeurs of Washington's society disported themselves in no manner unbefitting their calling, the general conversations brought several notable points to attention.

Now, the social importance of a chauffeur may be a matter open to honest argument, but his place in the economic scheme of things leaves nothing to be questioned.

The chauffeur it appeared, judging from the conversations and the program at this week's ball, is in no manner a minute figure in the economic life of the community. He emerges, rather, as a Colossus of Rhodes.

The benevolent association was able to put out a 56-page program for the ball, 50 per cent of which was devoted to automobile advertising. And the presidents of two Washington firms which feature the higher-priced cars were in attendance!

It appears that when His Honor and the Madame have nearly made up their minds on which car to buy they consult the chauffeur. It is very good business, therefore, for automobile salesmen to attend the annual ball.

By no means was the ball lacking in social significance. It dislocated the schedules of Congressmen, Senators and even Justices of the Supreme Court.

"We usually tell the boss," said Mr. Volkman, "that we're going to have the ball. We reserve the night months in advance. Of course, there was a reception at the White House tonight, and some of them wouldn't ride in cabs. But the majority played the game."

While there was a reception at the White House, a goodly number of the embassy chauffeurs were in attendance, even at an early hour, and two of the President's chauffeurs were present. Monty Snyder, whom the President brought from Albany, N. Y., was expected at any moment.

• • • •

DRIFTING around the chauffeurs' ball, with one ear cocked for conversation, it became evident that there is a definite rivalry between private chauffeurs and cab drivers; that local embassies often bring chauffeurs from their native lands in order to avoid paying the prevailing wage in Washington, and that the Japanese Embassy has an American driver as chief of its chauffeuring staff.

In fact, not only was the Japanese Embassy represented, but one of its drivers, John Graham, was on the ball committee.

If the local chauffeur's association, which numbers about 150, has a caste system it starts with the White House staff. That is top.

Next comes the Supreme Court, represented at an early hour at the ball by Justice Sutherland's chauffeur. After that the embassies gain recognition.

When it come right down to it, though, they think the most interesting man in their outfit is Charlie Hudgins, who drives for the widow of a former Speaker of the House, Mrs. James R. Mann.

Charlie not only got his license way back in 1905, but he went to the North Pole with an exploration expedition. He often entertains them with tall tales of the Arctic at the monthly meetings.

In summation of the annual event, it may be said that even the chauffeurs agreed that their party was "a darned sight more respectable" than many thrown by their employers.

Little Businessmen's Report to Roosevelt

Text of the report made to President Roosevelt by the resolutions committee of Secretary Roper's conference on "Little Businessmen" follows:

In response to your invitation, extended through the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Daniel C. Roper, approximately 1,000 representatives of smaller business units, representing more than 40 States, have engaged in a discussion of steps which, in our opinion, will contribute to business recovery. This committee, duly appointed by the conference to convey its recomendations, desires to express the thanks of the entire conference for the opportunity to freely discuss their problems, as related to government, and for this first recognition of their part in the national economy.

Participants in this conference have earnestly discussed the ills that afflict them as small businessmen, and have given freely of their time in an earnest effort to assist in finding a way to complete prosperity, with the full belief that their opinions will be given full consideration, and that your concern in this matter is as great as their own.

Handle Half of Business.

As you know, small businesses still do more than half of the total volume of business in the United States. They are still the preponderant factor in the maintenance of employment. They operate to stabilize our economic life through a wider diffusion of activity. They contribute to an equalization of values throughout the Nation through widespread maintenance of local markets, and they and their families and employes constitute a major portion of our national purchasing power.

We present, therefore, a series of suggestions for your consideration:

1. In the matter of finances, we make these recommendations:

A. Enable the American banking system to make insured loans for all necessary purposes.

B. Set up a government agency to render this service wherever financial institutions are unable or unwilling to function.

Gains Tax Assailed.

C. Modify the capital gains tax to give the taxpayer credit for loss years against years of gain.

D. Repeal the undivided profits tax.

E. Modify Securities Exchange Commission's regulations to increase the amount of exemption to $500,000, but require reasonable information for protection of investors.

2. We urge the encouragement of the investment of private capital in new enterprises.

3. We ask that employer and employe alike be held responsible for the faithful observance of mutual labor agreements.

4. We urge that Government expenditures be curtailed and the budget balanced as soon as possible.

8. We urge the immediate institution of a campaign to stimulate business.

Fear Too Great Haste.

6. We recognize that social reform is necessary as a part of progress but urge that it is so rapid as to disrupt industry.

7. We urge that relief administration and responsibility be returned to local communities as rapidly as possible.

8. We urge that the Government continue to co-operate with business.

9. We urge that the Government abstain from granting advantages or special favors to nonprofit organizations either directly or indirectly.

10. We urge that it be considered unfair trade practice for firms, corporations or governmental units to sell to employes in competition with business.

11. We approve the principles of the Robinson-Patman and Miller-Tydings acts.

Chain Competition Hit.

12. We approve the principle of the State fair trade practice acts and urge approval of legislation designed to curb destructive competition of chain stores.

13. We urge the strengthening and enforcement of all laws seeking to curb monopolies.

14. In the matter of social security and unemployment taxes:

A. We favor the simplification of detailed forms in connection with the social security tax.

B. We recommend the reduction of unemployment taxes in stabilized industries where now exists justifiable employment experience.

15. We question the merit of a standard wage and hour bill because of geographical differentials.

16. We recommend that an immediate investigation of the administration of the Wagner Labor Relations Board be made.

Housing Act Favored.

17. We urge the approval of the Wagner-Steagall housing act and the encouragement and extension of home ownership by making loans for owner residence at a rate as low as 3½ per cent.

18 We urge that the Government confine its direct home building activities to slum clearance projects by means of assistance to local housing authorities by the United States Housing Authority.

19. We strongly urge that Works Progress Administration labor or money shall not be used for building purposes.

20. We indorse the principle of installment selling, but urge adherence to sound business practices in such sales.

21. In the matter of taxation:

A. We urge the simplification of the taxation forms so that they shall be more easily understood and less expensive in preparation.

B. We recommend broadening the income tax base.

C. We oppose holding companies when used for purposes of creating monopoly or tax evasion, but urge differentiation in the case of holding companies which are actually operating companies.

D. We oppose a surtax on "small business" closely held corporations.

U. S. Study Is Urged.

22. We urge that the Government study means whereby American manufacturers and exporters can obtain financial aid, making it possible for extension of credit to foreign purchasers of American goods comparable to credits extended by European manufacturers.

23. We realize the value of research now conducted by Government agencies for the general good of smaller businesses, and believe further that there is need for an organization to co-ordinate and disseminate the facts of proposed and existing legislation and other matters of general interest to smaller business. We therefore recommend the establishment of a permanent advisory council for small business interests with equal regional representation.

We reaffirm our faith in our Government and our President and we petition that these recommendations be given careful consideration and, if judged to be in the best interest of the Nation, they be speedily put into effect.

Confidence Affirmed.

We most respectfully express our belief that business will flourish when relationships between Government and business are more clearly charted; when capital is available to business, bringing with it the freedom of action which only financial stability can give.

The small businessmen who have labored in the preparation of the accompanying reports have done so with the full desire to work in harmony with the Government and in the belief that the happiness of every home and the welfare of every family rests in the hands of the businessmen of the Nation.

Mr. President, the small businessman are confidently looking to you for continued leadership.

Respectfully submitted — Fred Roth, chairman; James G. Daly, Harold D. North, Leslie E. Sanders, James B. Kleckner, Wallace D. Kimball, Robert P. Hastey, W. C. Tinsley, W. K. Gunter, O. L. Roach, Bernard F. McLain, D. E. McAvoy.

Smoke From Fire In Basement Fills New House Offices

Smoke from smoldering cork insulation of the air conditioning unit in the sub-basement seeped through the New House Office Building yesterday as District firemen fought in cramped quarters to extinguish it from 3:30 to 3:50 p. m.

Slight damage was confined to the unit room, said David Lynn, Capitol architect. A similar fire several weeks ago poured smoke into the building.

Cramped quarters hindered the fight. A workman using a blow torch for some repair work was thought to have started the fire, Lynn said.

Politiconomic Forum To Hear Dr. Borchard

Dr. Edwin M. Borchard, professor in Yale University law school, will address members of the National Politiconomic Forum at their Sunday breakfast meeting at the Hay-Adams on "The American Foreign Policy." He is in the Capital for the Bronson Cutting lecture at Constitution Hall.

Rabbi Parker Speaks.

Rabbi Benjamin Parker spoke on "Some Consequences of Being a Jew" at the evening services of Adas Israel Hebrew Congregation yesterday. After the services there was a social hour and forum, with Maxwell A. Ostrow speaking on "Democracy's Greatest Needs."

Presbyterians To Hear Talk by Dr. McCartney

Covenant-First Church Pastor to Speak on 2d Commandment.

The Rev. Dr. Albert J. McCartney will continue his series of sermons on the Ten Commandments tomorrow morning in Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, using as his text the Second Commandment, his theme being "The Living Image."

The Rev. John F. B. Carruthers, of Pasadena, Calif., has arrived to be the guest minister for several months, and to assist Dr. McCartney in pastoral and administrative work. Mr. Carruthers formerly was associated here with the Church of the Covenant under the ministry of the Rev. Dr. Charles Wood.

Central Presbyterian. Dr. James H. Taylor, pastor, will conduct the communion service in the morning and speak on the Lord's Supper.

At 6 o'clock there will be "open house" for the young people, after which the Christian Endeavor Society will meet.

The annual praise service for foreign missions will be held at 8 p. m. The Rev. Dr. Lacy I. Moffett, missionary from China, will speak. Dr. Moffett left the Mid-China Mission before the Japanese invasion had reached that part. Since then the whole of the Mid-China Mission of the Southern Presbyterian Church has been practically destroyed.

French Congregation. The Rev. A. F. Liotard, pastor, will conduct a 4 p. m. French service in New York Avenue Church with a sermon on "Ou Demeures-Tu?"

Metropolitan. The Rev. J. Lowry Fendrich, jr., D. D., who was called recently to the pastorate of this church, took up his residence in the new manse, 3410 Pennsylvania avenue, this week.

At the 11 a. m. service tomorrow he will speak on "So This Is Religion." For the 6 p. m. vesper service he has selected "Character Without Strain."

Westminster Memorial. The Rev. Harry V. Porter, pastor, will conduct the morning service at 11 o'clock and deliver a communion meditation on "The Price of His Sacrifice," after which the Lord's Supper will be observed. At 8 p. m. the pastor will speak on "Being a Christian in a Big City."

Chevy Chase Presbyterian. "Remember" will be the subject of the Rev. J. Hillman Hollister's sermon at the 11 a. m. service. Dr. Nelson Vance Russell will be the guest of the Hearthstones at 8:15 p. m. in the young people's room.

Gunton Temple. The Rev. Dr. Bernard Braskamp, pastor, will speak in the morning on "Building a Strange Generation." Boy Scouts Troop, No. 31, and members of the Cub Pact, under the leadership of Scoutmaster Bernard Donnelly, will attend in a body.

New York Avenue. The Rev. Peter Marshall, minister, will have for his topic at the morning worship at 11 o'clock, "Alabaster Altars." At the evening service at 8 o'clock, Mr. Marshall will continue his series of sermons on the life hereafter. The general theme of this series is "Behind the Curtain."

The young people of the Christian Endeavor Society will hold a fellowship tea at 6 o'clock in the parish hall. Following the tea, Miss Anne Gore will lead the society in a discussion of the topic, "Many, Yet One." The Tuxis group will meet in the parish hall at 7 o'clock.

Unitarians Plan Young Folks' Day

In common with Unitarian churches throughout the country, All Souls' Church will observe Young People's Sunday at the 11 a. m. service. The minister, Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., will preach on "A Growing Faith." He will be assisted by representatives of the young people's organizations in the conduct of the service. At 10 a. m. Mrs. Thomas Burke, of the "Flying Squadron," will speak before the adult class in current problems on "Inter-American Amity." At the same hour, Rabbi Harry Silverstone, of Tifereth Israel Congregation will address the class in comparative religions on "Hosea," continuing a series on the "Prophets of Israel." At 5 p. m. Mrs. Henry T. Parett, soprano, will assist Lewis Atwater, organist, in a program of Scandinavian music.

Universalist National Memorial. "Youth Speaks" will be the subject of Dr. Frederic W. Perkins' sermon at the service in the Universalist National Memorial Church tomorrow at 11 a. m. It will be the annual observance of Young People's Sunday and members of the Young People's Christian Union will assist in conducting the service. At the Adult Forum at 10 a. m. Mr. Leifur Magnuson will speak on "The International Labor Office."

Science Churches' Topic Is 'Spirit'

"Spirit" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow. The golden text is from Ephesians 4:30: "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would" (Galatians 5:17).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "The flesh and spirit can no more unite in action, than good can coincide with evil."

Bare Beams, Stained Windows Beautify St. Paul's Church

400 Members Living in Capital, Virginia and Maryland Attend Services at Thirteenth and Crittenden Streets.

The dominant architectural feature of St. Paul Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Thirteenth and Crittenden streets northwest, is a large and beautiful cathedral-type auditorium which has bare wooden beams and receives its light through softly stained windows.

The original church of the St. Paul congregation was built in 1904 on Second street, to serve the Bloomingdale section.

As the city grew, that building no longer sufficed and, in 1927, the present structure was erected.

Approximately 400 members living in many different parts of the city and in nearby Virginia and Maryland now attend services at St. Paul's.

"Since the automobile is in such wide use, nobody minds going several miles to church any more. Of course, that widens the field over which the pastor must visit; but it is a very nice arrangement," the Rev. W. F. Locke, the St. Paul minister, said.

Mr. Locke is serving his term as pastor of the church. The first St. Paul minister was the Rev. Peter J. Jeffers. Serving the congregation between the years from the Jeffers pastorate and today have been: The Rev. W. E. Henry, the Rev. D. M. Blakemore, the Rev. Mr. Cobb, the Rev. D. M. Brown, the Rev. J. J. Ringer, the Rev. W. D. King, and the Rev. W. W. McIntyre.

Youth Sermon Series Planned

First Baptist Pastor to Give Four Messages in February.

A series of sermons on "Timely Messages to Modern Youth" will be delivered during February by Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden at the First Baptist Church at the 8 p. m. evening service. His topic tomorrow evening will be "Courageous Youth Facing a Frightened World;" February 13, "Believing Youth Facing a Cynical World;" February 20, Peace-Loving Youth Facing a Warring World," and February 27, "Serious Youth Facing a Flippant World."

Dr. Pruden's sermon subject tomorrow morning will be "Streams in the Desert."

Takoma Park. The Rev. William E. La Rue will speak in his pulpit tomorrow morning on "Life's Responsibilities." This will be followed by Communion and reception of new members. At the evening hour President Arnaud C. Marts, of Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pa., will speak. All young people are especially invited.

Calvary. A. C. Marts, acting president of Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pa., will be the guest speaker at the morning service at Calvary Baptist Church tomorrow. The monthly communion service will be held at the close, the Rev. W. S. Abernethy, minister, presiding. The Glee Club of the Bucknell University will give a sacred concert at the evening hour.

Chevy Chase Baptist. The Rev. Edward O. Clark, pastor, will give a brief communion meditation on "The Fourth Inscription," followed with reception of new members and observance of the Lord's Supper, at the 11 o'clock service.

Clinton N. Howard, editor of Progress Magazine, will be the guest speaker at the 8 o'clock community service tomorrow evening.

Metropolitan. In absence of the pastor, Dr. John Compton Ball, Dr. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House of Representatives, will be the guest preacher. His morning theme will be "The Disguises of the Brave." At the evening service he will speak on "The Illusions of Life."

Rt. Rev. Mr. Fiske Will Give Sermon At the Cathedral

The Right Rev. Charles Fiske, D.D., S. T. D., retired bishop of Central New York, who is conducting a conference at the College of Preachers this week, will deliver the sermon at the celebration of the Holy Communion in Washington Cathedral at 11 a. m. tomorrow. The very Rev. Noble C. Powell, D.D., dean of the Cathedral and warden of the College of Preachers, will be the preacher at the people's evensong service at 4 o'clock. Music for both of these services will be furnished by the Cathedral choir of men and boys under the direction of Robert G. Barrow.

The Holy Communion will be celebrated in one of the crypt chapels at 7:30 a. m. and 9:30 a. m. tomorrow.

Dr. Raphael Harwood Miller To Talk on 'Lost Generation'

Tomorrow morning at the National City Christian Church, the pastor, Dr. Raphael Harwood Miller, will preach on "The Lost Generation."

In the evening, Dr. Miller will observe National Youth Sunday and will talk particularly to the young people of his congregation on the subject, "Youth Is on the March—But Whither?"

Columbia Heights. The Rev. A. P. Wilson will preach upon "Whither Youth?" The following, young people will take part in the services, invocation, Robert Watkins; scripture, Maynard Eicher; hymn announcement, Mildred Whitlow. Two C. E. Alumni, George Hall and John Beek, will act as elders at the communion and a quartet consisting of Ethel Whitlow, Jeanne Hall, James Waldo and Donald Creech will render "The Changing Year."

Eighteenth Street. Morning worship and the Lord's Supper at 11 o'clock. Sermon by the minister, the Rev. Leslie L. Bowers, on "The Lifted Veil. The evening service will be in honor of Boy Scout Troop, No. 58, who will attend in a body with their families and friends.

Ninth Street. "What Jesus Teaches About God" will be the first sermon by the Rev. Clifford H. Jope, pastor at the Ninth Street Christian Church, Sunday morning at 11 o'clock in the series continuing until May 1 on "Christ's Answer to Paramount Problems of Today." This is the opening service of the Christ centered crusade in which the entire church and organizations are uniting. Special programs will be arranged for each service.

Third Christian Church. Sunday will be the mid-winter rally for the whole church. At which time the program leading to Easter will be presented.

Methodists Plan To Celebrate New Building

Metropolitan Memorial to Hold Special Services Tomorrow.

Metropolitan Memorial M. E. Church will celebrate Sunday the sixth anniversary of its location in Wesley Heights and beginning of a new congregation.

By action of the general conference of 1852 the original church was erected at C street and John Marshall place "as a connectional monument to our beloved Methodism." Made possible by contributions received from every State in the Union, it was truly a national church. Here Bishops Newman and Bristol preached before, elected to the episcopacy, and here Dr. John Reid Shannon, Dr. James Shera Montgomery and Dr. Harry D. Mitchell spoke to throngs of Methodist visitors from all parts of the Nation.

When the Federal Government needed the site the congregation looked toward American University, associated with the church from its inception, and erected the new gothic sanctuary opposits the campus, the congregation merging with a smaller congregation in the University Heights Church. Dr. Montgomery was then pastor. Dr. Chesteen Smith succeeded him in 1933, retiring in 1935. The present pastor is the Rev. William Andrew Keese, who was called to Metropolitan from Towson, Md.

Tablets from the old church adorn the walls of the new, and each Sunday visitors are registered from many States.

The anniversary sermon will be preached by the minister, his theme being "Trumpets in the Morning."

Hamline. "The Stripling" will be the sermon subject of Dr. H. W. Burgan at Hamline Methodist Episcopal Church tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. As it is Scout Sunday, Boy Scout Troops Nos. 30, 32 and 39 will attend. At 8 p. m. the minister's theme will be "They Supposed."

Foundry. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris will be assisted at the 11 o'clock service by the Rev. E. W. Luccock, pastor of the American Church in Shanghai, China, who will bring a message on Christian work in China.

The American Church is an international as well as an interdenominational one. Dr. Luccock is spending several months in this country in the interest of Chinese Christians. A lay speaker will also present the work of the Foundry campaign for reduction of indebtedness on the educational building.

At 8 p. m. Dr. Harris will bring a message on "The Methodists March," which will be a report on the United Methodist Council, held during the last few days in Chicago, at which he was one of the speakers. Boy Scout Troop No. 47 will attend this service.

Chevy Chase. The Rev. Edward G. Latch will speak on the subject, "The Boy in the Temple," at the 11 o'clock service Sunday. There will be Holy Communion.

Eldbrooke. Holy Communion will be observed tomorrow at morning worship, with an address by the Rev. Walter M. Michael on "Growing a Soul." At the evening service the pastor will preach, using "What Do We Owe the Church?" as the sermon subject.

Union. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at morning and evening services tomorrow. New members will be received. Dr. Edwards, the pastor, will speak in the morning on "Choice and Destiny," and in the evening on "The Surest Hope."

McKendree. Morning worship at 11 o'clock, with communion meditation, by the Rev. Samuel E. Rose, on "Christ's Self-Grasp." Holy Communion will be administered. Informal song service at 8 p. m. Brief sermon on "Life's Invidious Bars."

Dumbarton Avenue. On Sunday morning the minister, the Rev. Walter Franklin Atkinson, will administer the Sacrament of Holy Communion. At the 8 o'clock evening service a special program will be presented by the members of the official board. One of the features of this program will be roll call of all new members received during the present pastorate.

Trinity. Holy Communion will be administered tomorrow at 11 a. m., and at 8 p. m. Dr. Dan L. Ennis will speak on the subject, "A Boy's Ambition." The Boy Scouts of Trinity, Troop No. 89, will be guests.

Lincoln Road. At 8 p. m. the minister, the Rev. Reginald Heber Stone, will speak on "Landmarks of Civilization." The doors of the church will be opened for the reception of members. At 11 a. m. the Holy Communion will be administered, members received into church fellowship and the communion message will be "In Remembrance of Me."

Lewis Memorial. At the morning service the sermon will be delivered by the Rev. John L. Mixon, director of the department of social welfare of the Washington Federation of Churches. Dr. Chesteen Smith will preach at the evening service.

At Washington Grove.

J. Raymond Schmidt, of Washington, D. C., general superintendent of the National Civic League, will address a temperance service at the church school of the M. E. Church in Washington Grove, Md., tomorrow at 9:45 a. m.

Chorus Choir Will Sing at Reformation

'Transfiguration of Christ' to Be Theme of Sermon by Dr. Blackwelder.

"The Transfiguration of Christ" will be the theme by Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Reformation, tomorrow morning at the 11 o'clock service. The chorus choir, under the direction of Miss Mary A. Weidley, will sing "O Worship the Lord," by N. Watson. At 7:45 for the organ prelude, Miss Ruth Hartzell will be the guest organist and will render "Prelude in F Major, my Bach, and Toccata and Fugue in D Minor, by Bach. At the 8 o'clock service, Dr. Blackwelder will continue his pre-Lenten series, using for his subject "How to Become Aware of the Spiritual Universe."

Luther Place Memorial. Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor, will continue his series of pre-Lenten sermons at the 11 o'clock service tomorrow morning. He will preach on "What Do You Expect of Your Church?" The choir will sing "Open Our Eyes," by McFarlane. "Praise Ye the Lord," by Huhn, will be sung by Mr. Harry Yeide as the offertory solo.

St. Mark's. "The Holy Name," first in a series on "Morals and Moderns" will be the sermon by the pastor, the Rev. J. Luther Frantz at the 11 a. m. service.

Christ. There will be a celebration of the sacrament of the altar Sunday morning at 10:20 o'clock. In the 11 o'clock service, the pastor, the Rev. J. Frederic Wenchel, will begin a series of two sermons on the question, "Is Life Worth Living?" This Sunday morning he will speak on "Solomon."

St. Stephen's Evangelical. Foreign Mission Day will be observed at the 11 a. m. service. The members of the Sunday school will take charge the prayer being given by Melba Bennett and the scripture lessons read by Betty Donaldson and Betty Lou Thrasher. Two short addresses will be given by Mrs. A. M. Houff and Mrs. William Minnick.

St. Paul's. The pastor, Dr. Henry W. Snyder, will preach tomorrow morning on "Prepared 500 Per Cent." This service will mark the twenty-eighth anniversary of the founding of the Boy Scouts in America. Troop No. 78, under Scoutmaster Ralph F. Bartley, will attend in a body. At the evening service, the Rev. Harry P. Dunlap, guest speaker, will use as his sermon topic: "The World a Lie."

Augustana. Dr. Arthur O. Hjelm will preach tomorrow on "Declarative and Nondeclarative Faith" at the morning worship service in the assembly room of 2400 Sixteenth street northwest at 11 o'clock.

Grace. Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, pastor, will preach Sunday at 11 a. m. His theme will be "Let the Church Care for These Things!"

Georgetown. "After Six Days" will be the subject Sunday, 11 a. m., in Georgetown Lutheran Church, the Rev. Harold E. Beatty, pastor.

Christ Lutheran, Bethesda. "Transfigured Men" will be the theme of the pastor, the Rev. Henry J. Whiting, at 11 o'clock.

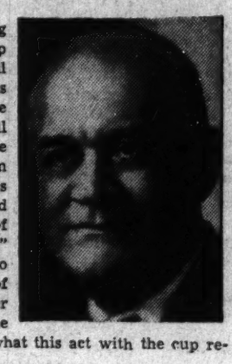
Forum to Hear Hershaw.

Prof. L. M. Hershaw will address the Civic National Forum at the Whitelaw Hotel, Thirteenth and T streets northwest, at 5 p. m. tomorrow on "Abraham Lincoln, the Emancipator."

'The Cup'

By the Rev. H. W. Burgan,
Pastor, Hamline M. E. Church.

At the Last Supper which our Lord partook with His disciples it was said of Him that "He took the cup and gave thanks" (Matthew 26:27). The interesting thing about this statement is that the cup was symbolical of the bitter experience which awaited him on the cross.



He said on one occasion, referring to His passion and death, "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink of it?" Addressing His disciples at another time He said, "Are ye able to drink the cup that I shall drink of?" Then, too, in Gethsemane He prayed, "Let this cup pass from me, nevertheless not as I will, but as Thou wilt." At this supper He passed the cup to His disciples and said of its contents, "This is my shed blood." Yet the same cup He could press to His own lips, and do it in a spirit of thanksgiving. The ability to suffer life's darkest experience and all the while maintain a spirit of praise is what this act with the cup reveals.

How could He do it? If men may learn His secret then they, too, may face the bitter crises of life patiently with praise upon their lips. No agonizing experience ever comes to mankind but what was paralleled in the life of the Master. He was the victim of freezing indifference, men failed to appreciate Him and His message, He suffered undeserved hostility, He was maliciously misrepresented, He was unjustly criticized, He found friends faithless, He was lonely, He suffered public humiliation, He was physically tortured, He saw His cause seemingly lost, and He endured cruel death. All of these things were in His cup. Hence, no man can surpass Him in suffering. In the midst of it all He could give thanks. To know the secret powers of His life, and, through Him, appropriate them to ourselves comes the ability to endure affliction and at the same time retain a song in the heart.

What then was His secret? 1. He was keenly conscious of the fact that the eternal God was His Father. The Fatherhood of God sustained Him. 2. He believed Himself an obedient Son. His woes were in the line of duty. 3. He had given Himself to a career for the advancement of His fellowmen; to bring to pass the salvation of the human race. 4. He had the assurance that beyond the grave His Heavenly Home awaited Him. To Him death was going home. The committing of one's life to these convictions is to become master over life's untoward circumstances and acrid experiences.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Asks How to Discourage Persistent Suitor's Unwelcome Attentions, Without Being Rude.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: A gentleman in my office has been annoying me for dates. I have managed to put him off for months on end, but he still persists in asking me for more dates. After running out of excuses, I dated him for about the sixth time in two years, purposely picked a fight with him and, much against my principles, was rude to him.

* * * *

Two days later, this same young man made a special point of apologizing to me and again annoyed me for a date. If you can give me any advice as to how to dispose of him once and for all without being unnecessarily rude, I shall appreciate it. Sincerely

GIVE UP.

* * * *

DEAR G. U.: It seems to me a little kindly candor would be far less rude, under these circumstances, than accepting the man's hospitality and then deliberately "picking a fight with him." Why don't you tell him that, so far as you are concerned, the two of you just don't "click," and that it's a waste of time, money and effort all around to attempt to promote friendship where friendship obviously was not intended to exist. When he apologized for the quarrel, you should have excused him of all responsibility, claimed the fault as your own, and explained that it was your clumsy way of attempting to show him which way the wind blows. You might say, simply: "Please don't ask me for any more dates, John. There's just no point to it. I don't want to seem rude or unkind or unappreciative. I only want to be fair; and I warn you that you're wasting your time."

* * * *

If, in the face of such volley, he continues to besiege you with invitations, decline them with a brief, "No, I couldn't. I'm going to be busy. Sorry." And don't amplify with any further explanation or apology. I've known women who couldn't compel the attentions of certain men who attracted them, but I've never known a woman who couldn't get rid of an objectionable suitor if she really wanted to. Maybe you flirt with this man, out of sheer vanity, even when declining the majority of his invitations, just to prove to yourself and to the world that you can keep a man dangling in despair. M. H.

Secretary's Story Irks Man.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a lawyer and I boiled over on reading the long letter signed, "One Who Knows," in your column of February 1. You had her right, Mary Haworth, only you pulled your punches. And, incidentally, let me say that I don't believe you are a woman at all, Mary Haworth. You think too straight for a woman. A woman only thinks she thinks. She knows what she wants and makes her thinking fit.

* * * *

As for that long-winded correspondent who told how she bested the scheming employer who "plotted her downfall," let me tell her how I analyze her experience. She was married. Her husband was out of work and temporarily dependent on her earnings. He was an honest, well-meaning scrub; no great shakes as a businessman, not attractive sexually and not a particularly good mixer. He lost his job, and later his wife, but still didn't get another woman to fill in. Just an all-around dub, in other words.

* * * *

The wife was working for a man who was one of her social set. He was a money maker, and a generous, kindly fellow, devoted to his wife and had no once-in-a-while girl. But he was human and the secretary was pretty. He wanted her. But misinterpreting his emotion, or being afraid of it, he transmuted it into kindliness toward her and her husband. Had he been a free-liver and selfish, he would have told her he was hard up, had large and pressing debts, and then he would have made a sex play for her. Instead, he slipped her real money, without letting her know where it came from. He tried to get her stick of a husband a job. He found the openings but the husband couldn't qualify. (Meanwhile, the woman pried around and found the money was coming from her boss.)

* * * *

Then the boss finally said to the woman, deciding the husband was no use, "Judy, you'll have to build a fire under Jake. He won't get out and hustle until he has to. Tell him to find a job or you'll stop paying the rent." There, again, the boss showed he didn't know women. Sex is not all fun for women, as it is for men. For women, it is also pain, and they want to suffer for sex. But this woman took her boss's well-meant but unenlightened advice, thereby showing she didn't love her husband . . .

* * * *

Well, the boss made his play for her at last. He did it blunderingly, awkwardly. He didn't know how to begin or when to stop. She could have stopped it long before it started. Every good-looking woman is tentatively approached every week of her life. When she doesn't want to play, she lets the man know so, unmistakably. And mentions the matter to nobody, as it is a commonplace of her existence. Unless, of course, she is a homely wash-out who has never been approached before, and then she runs proudly to tell her husband. It's a blunder to offer any gallantry to a homely woman. She'll tell. Not that I think the woman in this case was homely. She was simply hell-bent on proving the stanchness of her virtue under trying circumstances.

* * * *

In order to show how she came through the fire, she pictures the boss to you, and to herself, as a designing, deep-dyed villian. She imputes evil to his every innocent and kindly act. Being by nature a highly selfish woman, she tries to prove she has no occasion for gratitude. If her boss reads this, I say to him: throw her out of your office. Understand, I don't know these people; all I know is the woman's letter. But, as a lawyer, I have had women on the stand many's the time. And they lie like sixty. The jury usually knows when they're lying, but gives them the verdict anyway. This secretary may get the verdict from your readers, but not from me. I know her sort, and I hope you print this opinion of a MAN WHO KNOWS.

Your Figure, Madame!

Vitamins Found Necessary for Beauty as Well as for Health; Have Special Properties for Skin, Bones, Teeth and Hair.

By Ida Jean Kain.

TO THAT OLD saying "homely in the cradle, pretty at the table," we might add IF you get your vitamins.

From scientific experiments, it has been concluded that the characteristics of beauty are practically identical with those of superb health. The deficient diet which produces a low level of vitality may also be blamed for dingy, scraggly hair and lusterless eyes. On a high vitamin diet, which promotes health and high vitality, the by-products are more than likely to be a sparkle in the eyes, skin as smooth as a child's and beautiful hair.

It is really true that you look your best on the diet that makes you feel the best, and whatever you intend doing about your weight, your first concern should be to see that your daily menus furnish from 800 to 1,000 calories of the elements that foster health and beauty—the vitamins, minerals and protein.

Most Diets Inadequate.

Scientists generally seem to be of the opinion that most of us are inclined to follow diets that are inadequate in some respect. A deficiency of vitamin A is just about the worst thing that can happen to a girl's looks! When your doctor prescribes vitamin A concentrates for you, he probably does so with the idea of building up your resistance to respiratory diseases and colds. But if you are interested in the beauty angle, this vitamin has an astonishing lot to do with your looks. Vitamin A deficiency shows up in rough, dry skin, which wrinkles prematurely; a susceptibility to skin infection, affects the teeth and dims the sparkle in the eyes.

Vitamin A rich foods are whole milk, butter, cream, egg yolk, spinach, carrots and cod liver oil. One little vitamin A capsule daily reinforces the reducer's diet with this important element without making any appreciable difference in the calories.

Vitamin B, known as the nerve vitamin, is just as important as vitamin A. It contributes to muscle tone and beauty of the skin besides playing its role in the health of the nervous system. Have you ever seen a beautiful nervous wreck? I never have. It is significant that women need more B than men and that children need more than adults. Underweights and persons with a great nervous drive should take optimum amounts of vitamin B. It is supplied in fruits and vegetables to some extent, in whole grain bread and yeast. It may also be obtained in capsule or tablet form at the corner drugstore.

Vitamin C in Fruits.

Along with vitamin D, vitamin C is a factor in the regulation of the calcium metabolism. Most cases of tooth decay are traced to a lack of this vitamin. Lack of vitamin C also results in stiffness of the joints and in an old feeling. C might also stand for citrus—the vitamin is so plentifully supplied in citrus fruits. The sources are canned or fresh orange juice, grapefruit, tomato juice, lemons, pineapple juice, raw cabbage, cooked potato.

Vitamin D is obtained from the action of the sunshine upon the naked skin. This sunshine vitamin is essential to the utilization of calcium for the bones and teeth, and although it can be stored in the body, the diets of both children and adults benefit from the addition of A and D concentrataes. Food sources are spinach, whole milk, butter, egg yolk and irradiated foods.

Vitamin G is another element which affects the skin. Moreover, a prolonged deficiency of G results in dullness and loss of hair! You obtain G in brewer's yeast, yeast extracts, meat, eggs, legumes and milk.

So rapidly are vitamins gaining recognition as beauty aids that it is now possible to purchase them at the cosmetic counters at some of the large department stores. Various drug manufacturers put out vitamin concentrates in capsules and tablet form, and you can buy them separately or in combination. For example, there are vitamin B tablets, and there are also vitamin A, B, D and G tablets or capsules. Simply ask your druggist for the vitamin you wish.

Lace Jabot Accents Wool Frock

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

THERE IS nothing like lovely lace to give a fresh and feminine look to clothes of any color, at this time of the year when jaded wardrobes need toning up, a lingerie touch at the throat is an excellent addition to either suits or frocks. The expenditure may be whatever you prefer, although very nice lace collars, jabots, bows and gilets are available at nominal prices. Any of these lace accents will be as good style in the spring as they are now—hence a practical as well as a smart purchase. The attractive lace jabot and tiny collar shown above is adaptable to accompany suits and frocks of either silk or wool. It is pictured here with a black sheer wool frock, black gloves and hat; note the wide gold bracelet to give a note of color contrast and glitter to the costume. The lace is a copy of rare old lace in an interesting flower pattern.

Men as 'Finicky' As Women About Diet, Sleuth Finds

Mary Margaret McBride, radio columnist, says men are just as "faddy" about their diets as women. She uncovered this fact when she made a tour of restaurants that are run exclusively for men: eating places in men's clubs, newspaper office restaurants and the like.

"Don't think for one minute that the Hollywood diet, the 18-day diet, or that banana-and-milk diet are used exclusively by women. The men, too, insist on following them," she says. "Perhaps women make more fuss about them—anyhow I know they're teased more about dieting than men are."

Miss McBride resents the fact that there is so much sex discrimination in regard to food. She wishes men would take more interest and get more excited about food and its preparation. "I don't mean that they need to go into the kitchen and help their wives fix dinner—most of them haven't time to do that. But if they were eager to know how an especially good dish was prepared or what ingredients it contained, they'd get better food.

"That kind of attention to her cooking," says Mary Margaret, would make the average woman take more pride in the dishes she fixes and would encourage her to be more experimental with her menus. The average table in America is set with healthful but drab dishes. Drab, not because the American woman doesn't care, but because there is seldom any reason, or inspiration, furnished her for making them otherwise."

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Feb. 4.

THERE are two crops which never fail us among our 7,000,000. One consists of "infant prodigies," who grow here wilder than poison ivy. The other is made up of "aged recluses."

ALICE HUGHES.

Now, every woman and man who knows the newspapers knows all about "aged recluses"—yet in their deeper aspects they always remain an impenetrable mystery. Aged recluses are often referred to by journalists as "eccentrics," which merely means that from the public's viewpoint some screw has come loose in their poor old heads, battered by long lives in a crazy world. When these poor old people finally pass away in their littered rooms, they are oftenest found to possess bankbooks totting up large sums, good second mortgages, and sometimes stacks of Government bonds. And the cause of their passing is usually given as "malnutrition." Wealthy old men and women, by some strange mental quirk, won't buy food!

The most astonishing "aged recluse" brought to light here in years has just appeared in the press. Her name was Mrs. Johanna Meyer, who was somewhere between 80 and 100, and was a different sort of recluse. She lived in dingy rooms on the deep west side, in the heart of Paddy's Market along the Ninth avenue curb, and was well known in that squalid district. When she was found dead due to malnutrition and other things, $22,000 in negotiable bonds were found in her two rooms—and there wasn't even a lock on the front door! If you still think we are the world's greatest Gomorrah, note that the poor old lady was never once molested in that rough, tough and ready neighborhood! She even owned the building! Her riches were no secret. "She left only $250,000?" said Dentist Ben Salkoff, a neighbor. "We thought it must be $1,000,000!" And there she was, dingily dressed, rich, and finally fading away from prolonged hunger! Isn't it amazing! What happens in the heads of "aged recluses?"

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I've just been talking to young Edmund Strudwick, who is just back from Washington, where he painted the portrait of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. I asked about Madame President, my columnist colleague, as a sitter, and the artist said she didn't seem much interested in being immortalized in oil, but that she posed very graciously, just the same. How can such a busy woman find time to sit for resting purposes, let alone portraits, is what I'd like to know, please! . . .

* * * *

The only novel I've had time for the past two weeks is "The Turning Wheels," that grim and powerful novel of Boer days in South Africa a century ago. It's a terrific and hair-raising piece of work—far more exciting than the murder mysteries . . .

* * * *

Said hello to Louise Fazenda, the veteran yet youthful movie comedienne, who's in town for a visit. We had lunch with her in Hollywood once—and my spouse still remembers the occasion gleefully because Louise served him a prohibition cocktail that was glorious, compounded of pineapple ice and some obscure fluid called, I think "gin," as in cotton gin . . .

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Childhood Friend

Some vague, unpleasant memory stirred her as the chubby woman with the round baby face came determinedly toward her across the department store waiting room.

"Aren't you Jane Lawson?"

She had to admit that she was.

"I bet you don't know me. I'm Mabel Jenkins. You remember the Jenkinses don't you?"

(Jenkins . . . Jenkins . . . the big yellow house on the hill above the red bridge . . . the sloping peach orchards . . . the ducks in the yard . . .)

She felt suddenly uncomfortable in the pit of her stomach. "Oh, yes; of course," she said.

"My name's Fuller now. I married Ted Fuller—did you know him?"

"No-o, I don't believe so."

(There was the big yard and the old grindstone and the ducks and—and the swing! Yes, that was it—the swing. It was a board swing, under a big elm tree and all the ground around was hard and bare.)

"I married him after I moved away, but we're separated now."

"O-oh! That's—that's too bad!"

"Yes, we've been separated three years now. I simply stood all I could. First, it was drink and then finally—another woman."

(They were playing at the swing. She saw them clearly, Mabel in her pink gingham, herself in her blue and white sailor suit, her two pigtails of hair crossed in the back. Mabel's mother had said, "Now you take Jane out to the swing and be careful not to get hurt.")

"Oh yes, I—I see. I'm sorry."

"I can't see why such a thing should happen to me. You don't know how I had slaved for that man. You have simply no idea what I went through in the depression, how I did without things——"

"Well, I guess everybody——"

(They had taken turns swinging, they Mabel had shown her how to "work up." It was just as they were alighting——)

"Well, I know nobody on earth could have gone through what I've been through. If it hadn't have been for my mother——"

(As they had let go the ropes to jump, Mabel had fallen on the hard, bare ground. Her shrieks, shrill, rasping, rent the air.)

"Yes, if it hadn't have been for my mother the children and I would have suffered for a lot of things."

"Oh yes, that—that was too bad."

(Mabel had gone on screaming and sobbing. She had stood by in bewilderment and embarrassment. "Where—just where are you hurt?" she had asked timidly. "I don't kno-o-w." Mabel had shrieked. Then sobbed the louder.)

"Yes and now Bobby has to have his tonsils taken out and sister's got anemia and I ought to have an operation myself——"

"That is too bad."

(How Mabel had looked sitting there on the bare ground, the tears streaming, opening in grimy rivers down her red, swollen cheeks, her slightly skinned arm held aloft. She knew she should go to her and comfort her. But her feet would not budge in their tracks. Mabel's mother had came running from the house. She wiped Mabel's eyes and put mercurochrome on her arm.)

"I havent told you half of it yet. I wish you could come to see me some time and we could talk over the old days. I always say there are no friends like old friends."

"Oh yes, of course, that is, thank you."

(They had swung some more but she had gone home in a short time. She told Mabel's mother she felt a little sick at the stomach. She had never gone back to swing with Mabel.)

New Folding Trays Will End Juggling Dishes Upon Knees

And now party juggling is "out."

No, it's not the parlor artist who amuses his friends by sleight-of-hand tricks and such, but the poor-downtrodden male who has tried to balance spillable, tipable, breakable, articles on his knees at those buffet suppers, cocktail parties, or informal gatherings. And the item which is guaranteed to take the bad taste out of any gathering is a "Park-A-Tray," which is being introduced this week at the China, Pottery, Glass Gift Show in the Merchandise Mart, Chicago.

The new trays are 22 inch folding stands which can be placed anywhere beside each guest. Four wooden legs, rubber tipped and topped so they hold any tray, and your guest's worries are over. So inexpensive are they, that every hostess can own a dozen.

Virginia Cotillion Lures Society to Alexandria

Pre-World War Social Event, Revived by Mmes. Richardson, Hooff, Sinclair and Barbour, Delights Large Company.

Society—about 500 strong—from the District, Maryland and Virginia last evening made its hegira to the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria, where, until long after the southern moon had set, the Virginia cotillion held forth in a high and mighty style reminiscent of the days when the Washingtons, Lees and Fairfaxes used to ride to similar dances at Gadsby's Tavern . . .

Four years ago, a self-appointed committee consisting of Mrs. Frederick D. Richardson, Mrs. Charles R. Hooff, Mrs. S. A. S. Sinclair and Mrs. John S. Barbour decided to re-establish the fete which for some reason or other had been dropped out of the social landscape around the time of the World War. Last evening's party, filling the ballroom, reception room and Lee room of the hotel, definitely showed that they had started something.

The first cotillion figure, designated the Patroness Figure, started off at 11:30 when members of the floor committee led out the patronesses of the affair. William E. Byrd, jr., Charles R. Hoof, jr., William A. Moncure, Charles Wortham, Irwin Dunn, Fairfax Randolph, Talbot Sinclair, and Clem Conger were among the beaux for this number. Then at midnight came that old-fashioned Virginia supper with a resultant shortage in Smithfield hams this morning. At 1:30, the Debutante Figure formed, with Miss Louise Burke, Miss Gloria Lincoln, Miss Louise Tunstall Barroll, of Baltimore; Miss Frances Andrews, Miss Margaret Lorenz, of Toledo, Ohio, and Miss Marcella Martin among those taking part. Halfway though the dance, Mrs. Malcolm Matheson and Mrs. J. R. Herbert Boone were escorted to the center of the waxed floor and presented corsages to the debs as they floated by.

Many Dinners Precede Ball

There were dozens plus dozens of dinners before the affair with Mrs. Frank Mason Dillard entertaining Baroness von Below, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Lee Bostright and Dr. William McClellan. Miss Randolph Richardson was hostess to a large number of the younger group before the ball; and Miss Marcella Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Martin, of Alexandria, was given a dinner party by her aunt, Miss Lillian Marshall.

Others feting friends before the Cotillion were Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Hooff who were hosts to Mrs. Buchanan Merryman, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Boone, Mrs. William Pinckney Whyte, Mrs. Tunstall Smith, Miss Louise Barroll, of Baltimore; and Mrs. Fairfax Shields McCandlish, of Fairfax. Mrs. Joseph Crockett entertained Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fauntleroy Harrison, of Leesburg; Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Collins, of Harmony Hall, Md.; Mr. and Mrs. John S. Barbour, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Graham, of Fairfax; Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Gouverneur Hoes and Miss Gloria Lincoln, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Laurie H. Riggs, of Baltimore; and Mr. and Mrs. Francis Cox, Mr. and Mrs. George Washington Williams, and Mr. and Mrs. C. Southworth.

Patronesses who formed the reception committee were (in addition to the ladies mentioned earlier as being responsible for bringing back the Cotillion to social life), Mrs. W. Selden, Mrs. Frances Scott Herbert, Mrs. Gardner Lloyd Boothe, Mrs. Irwin Dunn, Mrs. William E. Byrd, jr., Mrs. Louis Slesman Scott, Mrs. Joseph P. Crockett, Mrs. Charles Beatty Moore, Mrs. Thomas E. Sebrell, jr., Mrs. Harry N. Cootes and Mrs. Aldrich Dudley.

Also Mrs. Malcolm Matheson, Mrs. William Moncure, Mrs. Fairfax Randolph, Mrs. C. S. Taylor Burke, Mrs. Lawrence Martin, Mrs. Arthur Herbert, Mrs. Frank Buttler, Mrs. Robert E. Lee, Mrs. Ronald Fairfax, Mrs. Buchanan Merryman, Baroness von Below, Mrs. John B. Gordon, Mrs. A. Smith Bowman, Mrs. Richard Rice Barrett, Mrs. John Otey Walker, Mrs. Courtland H. Smith, jr., Mrs. Ralph Worthington, Mrs. Charles Fauntleroy Harrison, Mrs. James R. Herbert Boone, Mrs. William Pinckney Whyte, Mrs. Tunstall Smith, Mrs. R. Ewell Thornton, Mrs. Fairfax Shields McCandlish, Mrs. C. William Wattles and Mrs. C. O'Conor Goolrick.

William Byrd, Floor Chairman

And neither last nor least, upstanding members of the floor committee included William E. Byrd, jr., who was chairman with William A. Moncure, Charles R. Hooff, jr., Dallas Dort and Charles Wortham as co-chairmen, and John S. Barbour, Marshall Beverly, Gardner L. Boothe, J. C. Herbert Bryant, Harry Byrd, jr., Charles Ellet Cabell, Clement E. Conger, Aldrich Dudley, jr., John B. Gordon, Westcott Hill, Stirling Harrison, Charles R. Hooff, Irwin Dunn, Walter DuBois Brookings, jr., Frank Goodwin, Courtland H. Smith, jr., Thomas C. Washington, Frank P. Cole 2nd, Howard Worth Smith, jr., Maj. John Otey Walker, Frank Littleton, William Herbert, James Keith, Robert J. McCandlish, Thomas F. Moncure, Fairfax Randolph, Frederick D. Richardson, Thomas E. Sebrell 3rd, John S. Scott, C. A. Swann Sinclair, jr., Talbot Sinclair, G. Anderson Burke, Douglas Smith, Franklin Backus, Richard Cheeseman, Meade Bolton McBride, W. Selden Washington and Haven Page.

Belgian Envoy And Wife Guests At Dinner Party

The Ambassador of Belgium and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz were ranking guests at a dinner given last evening at the Mayflower by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Ernest G. Draper and Mrs. Draper.

Count Jerzy Potocki, Ambassador of Poland, also was a guest in the company that included Justice and Mrs. Stanley F. Reed, the Minister of Norway and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, and Representative Edith Nourse Rogers.

Also the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre; the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. George S. Messersmith; the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wilmer, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Stuart.

Colleagues Visit N. Y. for Farewell To Charles Davila

A large contingent from the Rumanian Legation is in New York to bid good-bye to the former Minister, Charles A. Davila, who sails today at noon on the Conte de Savoia. He is resigning from the diplomatic service to enter politics in his native land.

Mr. Davila was extremely popular in Washington and also at Newport, where he spent many summers. Several nights ago Mrs. Carnelius Vanderbilt, a leading dowager of New York and the Rhode Island resort, gave a dinner in his honor.

Those in New York to see him off include the Charge d'Affaires of the Legation and Mme. Babes; the Financial Counselor, George Boncesco, and George Duca, second secretary of the legation. They are expected to return next week.

Belgian Aide Coming to D. C.

Baron Herve de Gruben, newly appointed Counselor of the Belgian Embassy, who arrived in New York several days ago with Baroness de Gruben, will come to Washington the first of next week.

Yesterday Baron and Baroness de Gruben were guests of honor at a reception given at the St. Regis by Raoul Grenade, Commercial Counselor of the Belgian Embassy.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. Wintemute William Sloan will sail today aboard the S. S. Columbus for a cruise around South America, by way of the Panama Canal and the Straits of Magellan. They will return home the last of March.

• • • •

The Raleigh Dance Club, composed of members of the younger set, will have its next meeting Friday, February 18, in the Pall Mall Room of the Raleigh Hotel.

Will Greet Sweden's Crown Prince

Bachrach.

MRS. A. MITCHELL PALMER will be a member of the reception committee for the Crown Prince of Sweden and the Crown Princess on their arrival in this country on June 29 to attend the Swedish Tercentenary in Delaware. The royal visitors will be passengers on the liner Kungsholm, which will dock at Wilmington where the tercentenary celebration will be held. Mrs. Palmer, who will return to Philadelphia Monday or Tuesday, has been widely feted during her recent trip to Washington. Wednesday she was present at the luncheon given for Mrs. Hull by Mrs. Jesse Jones, and on Tuesday night she dined with Mrs. Millard Tydings.

Millers Fete Capt. Flanagan

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Miller entertained at dinner in the Pall Mall Room of the Raleigh Hotel on Thursday night, with Capt. J. W. Flanagan, of Toronto, Canada, as their guest of honor.

Others present were Senator Tom Connally, of Texas; Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas; Representative Luther A. Johnson, of Texas, and Mrs. Johnson; Representative Fritz Lanham, of Texas and Mrs. Lanham; former Gov. William Hobby of Texas, and Mrs. Hobby; Frank Schoffield, collector of internal revenue; Mrs. W. C. Lake, Colonel C. C. Wren and Mrs. Wren, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Kliberg and Dr. Buie.

• • • •

Mrs. Louise Holland Brown will be "at home" tomorrow from 5 to 7 o'clock at her residence, 1018 Hamlin street.

The guest of honor for the occasion will be Mrs. Brown's sister, Miss Sallie Wills Holland and Miss Martha Petit. Friends invited include all former residents of Fluvanna County, Va., who are now living in Washington.

Drexel Biddles Are Met at Pier By Polish Envoy

The Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, returned to Washington last evening after a trip to New York to meet the United States Ambassador to Poland and Mrs. Anthony Drexel Biddle, who arrived on the Normandie.

The Ambassador and Mrs. Biddle are expected to arrive in the Capital today and will be at the Carlton Hotel during their stay. They will be guests of honor at a reception to be given tomorrow afternoon by Senator Joseph Guffey of Pennsylvania and his three sisters, the Misses Pauletta and Ida Guffey and Mrs. Carroll Miller.

On Thursday evening, February 10, Count Potocki will entertain at a dinner for the Biddles.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Watson will entertain at dinner this evening in honor of Representative and Mrs. Harry Englebright.

The party will take place at the Congressional Country Club. Spring flowers will decorate the table at which covers will be laid for 20.

Honored Before Cotillion

Harris & Ewing.

Miss Marcella Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Martin, who was guest of honor at a dinner party given by her aunt, Miss Lillian Marshall, prior to the Virginia Cotillion in Alexandria last evening.

Gusdorfs Mark Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gusdorf, who are celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage today, will be guests of honor at a reception from 8 to 11 o'clock this evening at the apartment of their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Gusdorf, at 4514 Connecticut avenue. Mrs. Samuel Revness, of New York, and Mrs. Maurice D. Rosenberg, jr., daughter and granddaughter of the couple, will assist in receiving.

Among the out-of-town guests who will be here for the occasion are Mrs. Harvey Spiegel and Harvey Spiegel, jr., of Newport News, Va.; Dr. and Mrs. Irvin Weber, of Baltimore, and Mrs. Philip Peyser, of Little Rock, Ark.

Mrs. Gusdorf, who was the former Miss Pauline Peyser, and Mr. Gusdorf were married in Washington by Mrs. Gusdorf's brother-in-law, the late Rev. Louis Stern.

David Seabury To Speak Here

David Seabury, consulting psychologist, will speak on "The Challenge of the New Psychology" at Town Hall tomorrow evening at 8:15 at the Rialto Theater.

Members of the panel will be Mrs. Aileen Barton, chief social worker of the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene; Dr. A. C. Christie, former president of the District of Columbia Medical Society; Dr. Stewart Henderson Britt, assistant professor of psychology at George Washington University, and Dr. Frank Bohn, writer and lecturer.

• • • •

Representative and Mrs. Clyde H. Smith will have as their guests next week, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Folsom, of Norridgewock and Augusta, Me., who will spend several days here.

Mr. Folsom, attorney general of Maine, was on the Governor's council when Representative Ralph Brewster was Governor. A number of parties are being planned for the Folsoms.

Latin-Americans Attend Luncheon

The director general of the Pan American Union, Dr. L. S. Rowe, entertained at luncheon Thursday at the Pan American Annex in honor of the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Dominican Republic, Julio Ortega Frier, members of the Permanent Commission on Conciliation and members of the Dominican-Haitian Commission.

Those of the Permanent Commission on Conciliation who were present were Peruvian Ambassador Manuel de Freyre y Santander; Argentine Ambassador Felipe A. Espil, and the Minister of Guatemala. Those representing the Dominican Commission at the luncheon were the Dominican Minister to the United States, Andres Pastoriza; the Dominican Minister to Cuba, Roberto Despradel, and Donald R. Richberg.

Of the Haitian Commission those present were the Minister of Haiti, Elie Lescot; Dantes Bellegarde, former Haitian Minister at Washington; Abel Leger, former Minister of Foreign Affairs of Haiti; Edme Manigat, Hoffman Philip, former United States Ambassador to Chile, and William Sanders, Chief of the Judicial Division of the Pan American Union.

Jean Gilbert, Roger Moister To Wed Feb. 19

Mrs. Lewis Daniel Gilbert has issued invitations to the marriage of her daughter, Jean, and Roger William Moister, jr., on Saturday, February 19, at the Washington Cathedral. The ceremony will take place in the Bethlehem Chapel at 4:30.

The bride-elect's cousin, Mrs. Stanley Irvine, of Marshall, Tex., who will be matron of honor at the wedding, will arrive in Washington today. Miss Leonie McCoy of Washington will be maid of honor, and bridesmaids will be Mrs. Frank Weller, Mrs. John D. Battle, Jr., of Philadelphia; Miss Elliott Lewis of University, Va., and Miss Mary Katherine Shaffer, of Cass, W. Va.

Clement Corbin Woodhull, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Woodhull, of Millington, N. J., will serve as ring-bearer. F. Corbin Moister, of Summit, N. J., will be best man for his brother. Ushers will include William H. Corbin, of Jockey Hollow, Morristown, N. J.; Stephen S. Chamberlain, of Maplewood, N. J.; Wharton Green, Jr., of Auburn, N. Y., and S. Edward Vought, of Glenrock, N. J.

The bride will be given away by Dr. George B. Trible of Washington, a close friend of her family, and following the wedding there will be a reception at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Trible at 2615 Thirtieth street.

Candid Camera Enlivens Prom For Georgetown

As each couple entered the ballroom for the Georgetown Junior Prom in the Continental Room of the Wardman Park Hotel last night, their pictures were snapped by a candid cameraman and will be sent to them later as fond recollections of the occasion. Russ Morgan's orchestra furnished the music.

Mrs. Roosevelt headed the list of patrons and patronesses, which also included the Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president of Georgetown, and the Rev. John E. Grattan, S. J., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Among the many who came from out of town to attend the event were Miss Gena Johnson, of Houston, Tex.; Miss Mary McKeen of Chicago; Miss Cecile Burke-Hennessy, of New Rochelle, N. Y.; Miss Evelyn McKeekin, of Philadelphia, and the Misses Nancy Van Vleck and Marie Murray, of New York City. William J. Dumas headed the prom committee.

Today the juniors will entertain at a tea dance at Wardman Park Hotel, a party which, as one of the committee members put it, "is really part of the prom itself." The Georgetown Collegiates, the school's own band, made up of students studying at Georgetown, will furnish the music.

Miss Anne Meriam Among Presentees At Ottawa Function

Among those presented at the annual drawing room of the Governor-General and Lady Tweedsmuir, January 28, in Ottawa, Canada, was Miss Anne W. Meriam, of Kensington, Md., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Welles Meriam. She wore royal blue velvet with an azure velvet court train, ruby and rhinestone ornaments, and carried a bouquet of white orchids.

Miss Meriam has been in Ottawa since the first of December as secretary to the Commercial Attache of the United States Legation.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. Farley Smith, of Greenville, S. C., entertained at a supper last evening in celebration of Mr. Smith's birthday. The party took place at the Wardman Park, where Mr. and Mrs. Smith are visiting his parents, Senator and Mrs. Ellison D. Smith.

• • • •

Among the guests at the supper were Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Pierce, of Florence, S. C.; Ellison Smith, jr., of Lynchburg, S. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Lawton, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bradley, jr., and J. Frost Walker, assistant to Senator Smith, and Mrs. Walker.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. C. Henry Heppenstall, of Wynnewood, Pa., are at the Carlton Hotel. Others there are Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Smith, of New York, and Miss Josephine van der Voort, of Fredonia, N. Y.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

THE MUSICALE which Charge d'Affaires Jules Henry is giving at the French Embassy this evening will be considerably enhanced by the appearance of Countess Jean de Polignac. The Countess not only is ornamental, but is a fine musician as well and will sing several numbers at the party.

DUDLEY HARMON.

Wife of Count Jean de Polignac, the Countess is here on her first visit to this country since 1926. She is one of the best dressed women in France, but then she should be, for she is the daughter of Mme. Lanvin, famous French couturiere, and her husband is manager of the House of Lanvin.

The titled Parisian concentrates on jewelry as well as clothes. In a recent interview in New York she remarked that it is easy to ruin a whole outfit by just the wrong necklace or bracelet, and that some ensembles require quite classic jewelry, while others need something more spectacular. "On the other hand," she is quoted as saying, "There are ensembles that are best with no jewelry at all. The thing is to know."

Therefore, take a good look at the Countess' get-up if you are among those going to the French Embassy this evening.

• • • •

TONIGHT'S PARTY is in honor of Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, famous French conductor who will lead her orchestra of five or six pieces. Yesterday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss entertained at a musicale where she conducted several selections of Monteverdi and Dubussy. The affair took place, of course, at the Bliss estate, Dumbarton Oaks in Georgetown.

• • • •

THE NEW Associate Justice of the Supreme Court and Mrs. Stanley Reed bid fair to be, with Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts and Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, the most sociable of this august group. They seem to be attending dinners practically all these nights and next Saturday, February 12, will be hosts in honor of the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings. The dinner will take place at the Mayflower.

Meanwhile, a number of people have received invitations from the Chief Justice of the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner for a dinner this evening in honor of the Attorney General and Mrs. Cummings.

• • • •

IT IS UNLIKELY that Washington will enjoy the company of Countess Potocka's society at all this winter. Although it was bruited about that she would join her husband, the Polish Ambassador, here sometime later in the season, it is now learned that the beautiful countess is in St. Moritz with her young son, and, as the Ambasador will go to Europe in the spring or summer, she has decided to remain abroad. Her mother has a house in Paris where Countess Potocka will join her after St. Moritz.

• • • •

Frau Dieckoff, clever wife of the German Ambassador, was largely responsible for the fact that the Germans are at last getting a new embassy here. Reports have it that she sent to Hitler himself some snapshots which she took of dingy headquarters on Massachusetts avenue, and the Fuehrer was so shocked, especially by the tenement-looking aspect of the rear of the building, that he decided that something should be done. Frau Dieckhoff will confer with authorities on the new embassy when she arrives in Berlin. She expects to sail next Friday and will return in March.

• • • •

DONNA MATILDE DE SUVICH, wife of the Italian Ambassador, who is in Garfield Hospital, is much improved, her many friends here will be glad to know. Furthermore, she is getting a grand rest . . . A wag suggested the other day that at this time of the year a lot of jaded souls would like to go to the hospital to get inoculated against invitations . . . Mr. and Mrs. Julian Allen sailed yesterday from New York to return to their home in Paris. Meanwhile, as they pulled out, their cousin, the Duc de Mouchy, pulled in on the Normandie. He is a brother-in-law of the Vicomte Sosthenes de la Rochefoucauld, who has been spending the winter in New York chiefly with the Elsa Maxwell set.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen were in Washington for a few days and were entertained by a number of people, including Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark Bristol and Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock.

Pennsylvanians To Stage Dinner

More than 200 Pennsylvanians residing in Washington are expected to attend the annual dinner and dance of the Pennsylvania Luzerne Country Club Thursday evening, February 17, at the Army-Navy Country Club. Expected to attend are Lieut. Gov. Thomas Kennedy; Representative P. J. Boland and Representative James A. Gildea, of Pennsylvania. Other honored guests will be Representatives Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey; John S. McCroarty, of California; John J. Dempsey, of New Mexico, and Michael Kirwan, of Ohio. Representative J. Harold Flannery, of Pennsylvania, will be the toastmaster.

The committee in charge of the dinner and dance is composed of Thomas J. Mangan, jr., D. L. Boland, Charles L. Levy, Dr. William V. Connors, Michael J. Torlinski, Dr. Joseph F. Elward, Mrs. William H. Collins, Miss Rhea McCravey, Andrew W. Glodek, Paul F. Gibbons, William Farrell, Edward Feeney, William J. Dougherty, Eugene Costello, Walter Joyce, Miss Lillian O'Malley, John B. McGinly, James Waters, George Cassidy, Raymond Garrity, Mrs. John O'Donnell and Joseph Gibbons.

Mrs. T. W. Page, Daughter Sail

Mrs. Thomas Walker Page and her daughter, Mrs. Page Upson, sailed Thursday from Baltimore aboard the City of Baltimore. They will travel through Europe for several months.

Mrs. Upson, the former Miss Celeste Page, is a sister of Mrs. John B. Wilson, of Washington.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. Esmond Ewing, of Hartford, Conn., accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Howard G. Jarvis, also of Hartford, are at the Carlton Hotel.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. Tyrrell Krum, of North Arlington, Va., are at the Hotel Commodore in New York.

Miss Richards' Nuptials Apr. 22

Miss Muriel Richards, whose engagement to Francis Warren Pershing, only son of Gen. John J. Pershing, was announced in September, will be married April 22 in St. Thomas Church in New York. The reception will be held at the Fifth avenue home of Jules Bache, grandfather of the bride-to-be.

Miss Richards, who is the daughter of Mrs. Frederick W. Beckman and Fred Lloyd Richards, attended the Brearley and Oldfield schools and studied at Mlle. Boissier's School in Paris.

Mr. Pershing was named for his grandfather, the late United States Senator Francis E. Warren, of Wyoming. He attended Phillips Exeter and in 1931 was graduated from Yale. He is a member of the University, Bankers and Yale clubs and the St. Anthony Society.

Garretts Arrive In Palm Beach

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Garrett, of Washington, who have been in Havana, arrived in Palm Beach to visit Mr. and Mrs. Grover Loening. Earlier in the week Mr. and Mrs. Loening gave a luncheon for Miss Hope Williams and James Roosevelt.

Mr. and Mrs. Garrett will return to Washington Monday and will entertain at a dinner the following evening.

• • • •

William A. Reid, of the faculty of the School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University, sailed recently on the Normandie for a cruise to South America. Mr. Reid was formerly foreign trade adviser of the Pan American Union.

While on this strip Mr. Reid will deliver a series of lectures aboard ship on inter-American topics.

Miss Janet Richards dean of women current event lecturers yesterday morning addressed members of the Capital Division of the National Women's Farm and Garden Association in a program at the Washington Club given for the benefit of the association. She was presented by Mrs. Jay Winston John, of Charlottesville, Va., president of the division.

Miss Richards, as is her custom, used large maps for the discussion of her subject. She gave the geographical background of the Sino-Japanese conflict and discussed the conflict in Spain which has now become almost a world war on Spain's territory, she said. She went back into history tracing the events leading up to the war in the Far East and in Spain as well.

The auditorium of the Washington Club was filled to capacity for the lecture and, following it, a luncheon in Miss Richards' honor was given at Wesley Hall. Seated at the head table with her and Mrs. Johns were Mrs. Murray Boocock, also of Charlottesville, who is present of the national organization; Mrs. Robert Mosely, of London, chairman of American proxies for the Associated Farm Women of the World and secretary of the American Woman's Club of London; Mrs. Wilbur Nelson, of Charlottesville, and Miss Grace Frysinger, who is vice president for North America of the Associated Farm Women of the World.

Prepare for Spring Meeting in Boston

The Capital division of the Farm and Garden Association, with other groups throughout the country, is making preparations for the annual meeting in Boston in April at which an exhibition of products of the farm women will be featured. Mrs. F. L. Lewton, of Maryland, is national chairman for marketing. Products representative of various parts of the country are assembled for the exhibition. Michigan, for instance, sends maple syrup, Christmas greens, jams and jellies, which are among the profitable products sold by women of the rural districts there. New England's association is best known for its hooked rugs, hand-made kid gloves, furs made from rabbit skins, and handsome glassware, made by one of the women members.

A survey is soon to be undertaken, Mrs. Lewton said yesterday, to determine what handicrafts there are which have not yet been discovered among the women of different districts. The investigation will include the Capital division. It is the purpose of the Women's Farm and Garden Association to promote co-operation between women of the rural districts and the cities in order to help the former to find markets for their products.

Mrs. Mosely was introduced at the luncheon and it was announced she would be the speaker at the next meeting of the association. She is the wife of an American business man in London and came to America in August to put her sons in school here. She is at present working with Miss Frysinger in the interests of the Associated Farm Women of the World, who will have their triennial meeting in London in 1939. They met last year in Washington, when about 6,000 were here. Hundreds of women from this country expect to attend the London convention, Miss Frysinger said. The organization includes women of 29 nations.

Many Attend Luncheon Also

Among those at the luncheon yesterday were Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Mrs. Edward Keys, Mrs. Robie M. Evans, Miss Gertrude Warren and Miss Madge Reece, who, with Miss Frysinger, are home economists with the Department of Agriculture; Mrs. Raymond A. Pearson, secretary of the Capital division; Mrs. Carl Casey, Mrs. Albert S. Goss, Mrs. James Craig Peacock, who was chairman of the luncheon; Mrs. Robert D. Maltby, Mrs. H. W. Gilbertson, Miss Gertrude Warren, and Mrs. Willoughby Chesley.

Mrs. Arthur T. Esgate, vice president for the District of Columbia, was out of town and unable to be present.

Mrs. Charles McNary, wife of Senator McNary of Oregon, is one of the active members of the Farm and Garden Association and organized the association in the State of Oregon.

Proceeds of yesterday's lecture will go to the association's education fund.

North Carolina Democrats Gay At Dinner Fete

Delegation of Congressional Members Are Guests of Honor.

North Carolina chickens, sweet potatoes and peas, sent directly from home, were on the menu last night at the second annual dinner of the North Carolina Democratic Club at the Raleigh Hotel. After dinner there was a dance at which 100 prizes, sent by manufacturers of the State, were awarded.

Members of the Congressional delegation and their wives attended as guests of honor. They included Senator and Mrs. Josiah W. Bailey, Senator Robert R. Reynolds and daughter; Representative and Mrs. Lindsay Carter Warren, Representative and Mrs. John H. Kerr, Representative and Mrs. Graham A. Barden, Representative and Mrs. Harold D. Cooley, Representative and Mrs. Franklin W. Hancock, Representative and Mrs. William B. Umstead, Representative and Mrs. J. Bayard Clark, Representative and Mrs. Robert L. Doughton, Representative J. Walter Lambeth, Representative and Mrs. A. L. Bulwinkle, Representative and Mrs. Zebudon Weaver.

Several officials from the State came to Washington especially to be present. Among them were Charles M. Johnson, State treasurer; Bruce Etheridge, director of the State department of conservation and development, and James S. Massenburg, State compensation officer for the WPA.

In the reception room outside the ballroom there was a long table piled with packages each containing ten articles manufactured in North Carolina. They ranged from cough drops to little blue caps, sent by a large chemical company, and from peanuts and cereal to cotton thread. There was great excitement among guests as packages were distributed. Later, among special prizes awarded there were such articles as all-wool blankets, a bolt of homespun, bath towels and bath mats and sewing kits.

If any North Carolinians were inclined to be homesick the setting for the party was designed to make them take the next train south. The ballroom was decorated not only with pine boughs but also a painting of Gov. Clyde L. Hoey and three large pictures representing different sections of the State done by Jesse Giles, of Washington, N. C. One was of the eastern section, the second of the Piedmont, or industrial section, and the third of the mountain district of the west.

About 380 members and guests attended the party, under direction of a committee headed by W. M. Hodges. Wesley McDonald, secretary to Senator Reynolds, is president of the society.

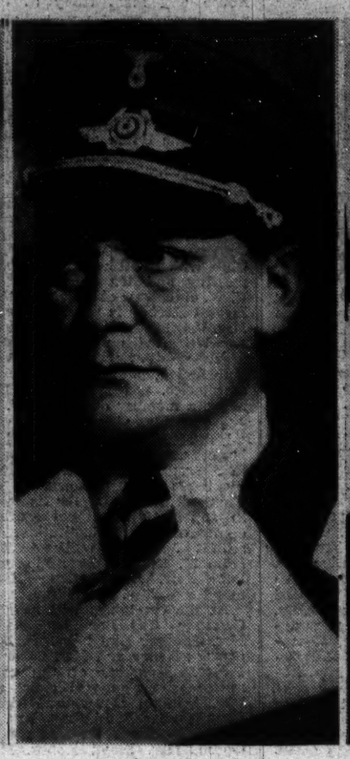
Hitler Seizes Direct Command of Germany's Growing Might

The Post is the only daily morning paper in Washington with A. P. WIREPHOTO Service.

Takes Over

1 Fiery Adolf Hitler took over direct control of Germany's armed forces in an extensive military and diplomatic shake-up to solve the worst crisis of his five-year reign.

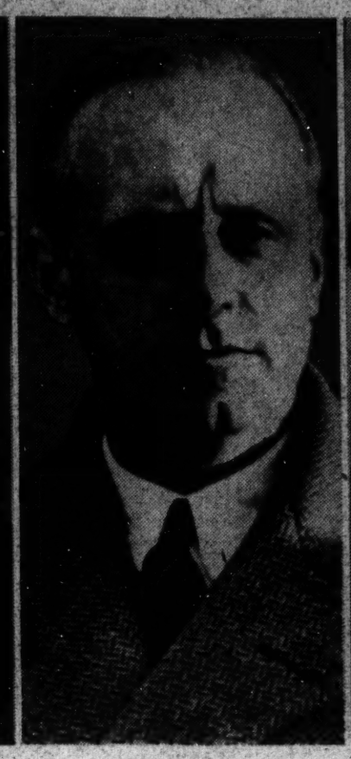


More Power

2 Col. Gen. Wilhelm Goering, air force minister, administrator of the 4-year economic plan and generally Germany's No. 2 man, became field marshal, gaining more power.

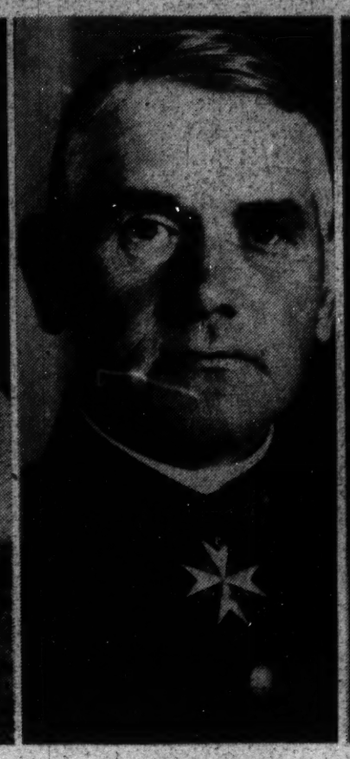
Heads Council

3 Baron Konstantin von Neurath, veteran diplomat and foreign minister, will be placed at the head of a new privy council of the cabinet under Hitler.



New Minister

4 Joachim von Ribbentrop, Ambassador to London, was made foreign minister, succeeding Von Neurath. The shakeup was interpreted as a victory for conservative generals.



Storm Center

5 Marshal Werner von Blomberg, erstwhile minister of war, precipitated the crisis by his "socially impossible" marriage and his resignation. He was retired.

Also Loses Out

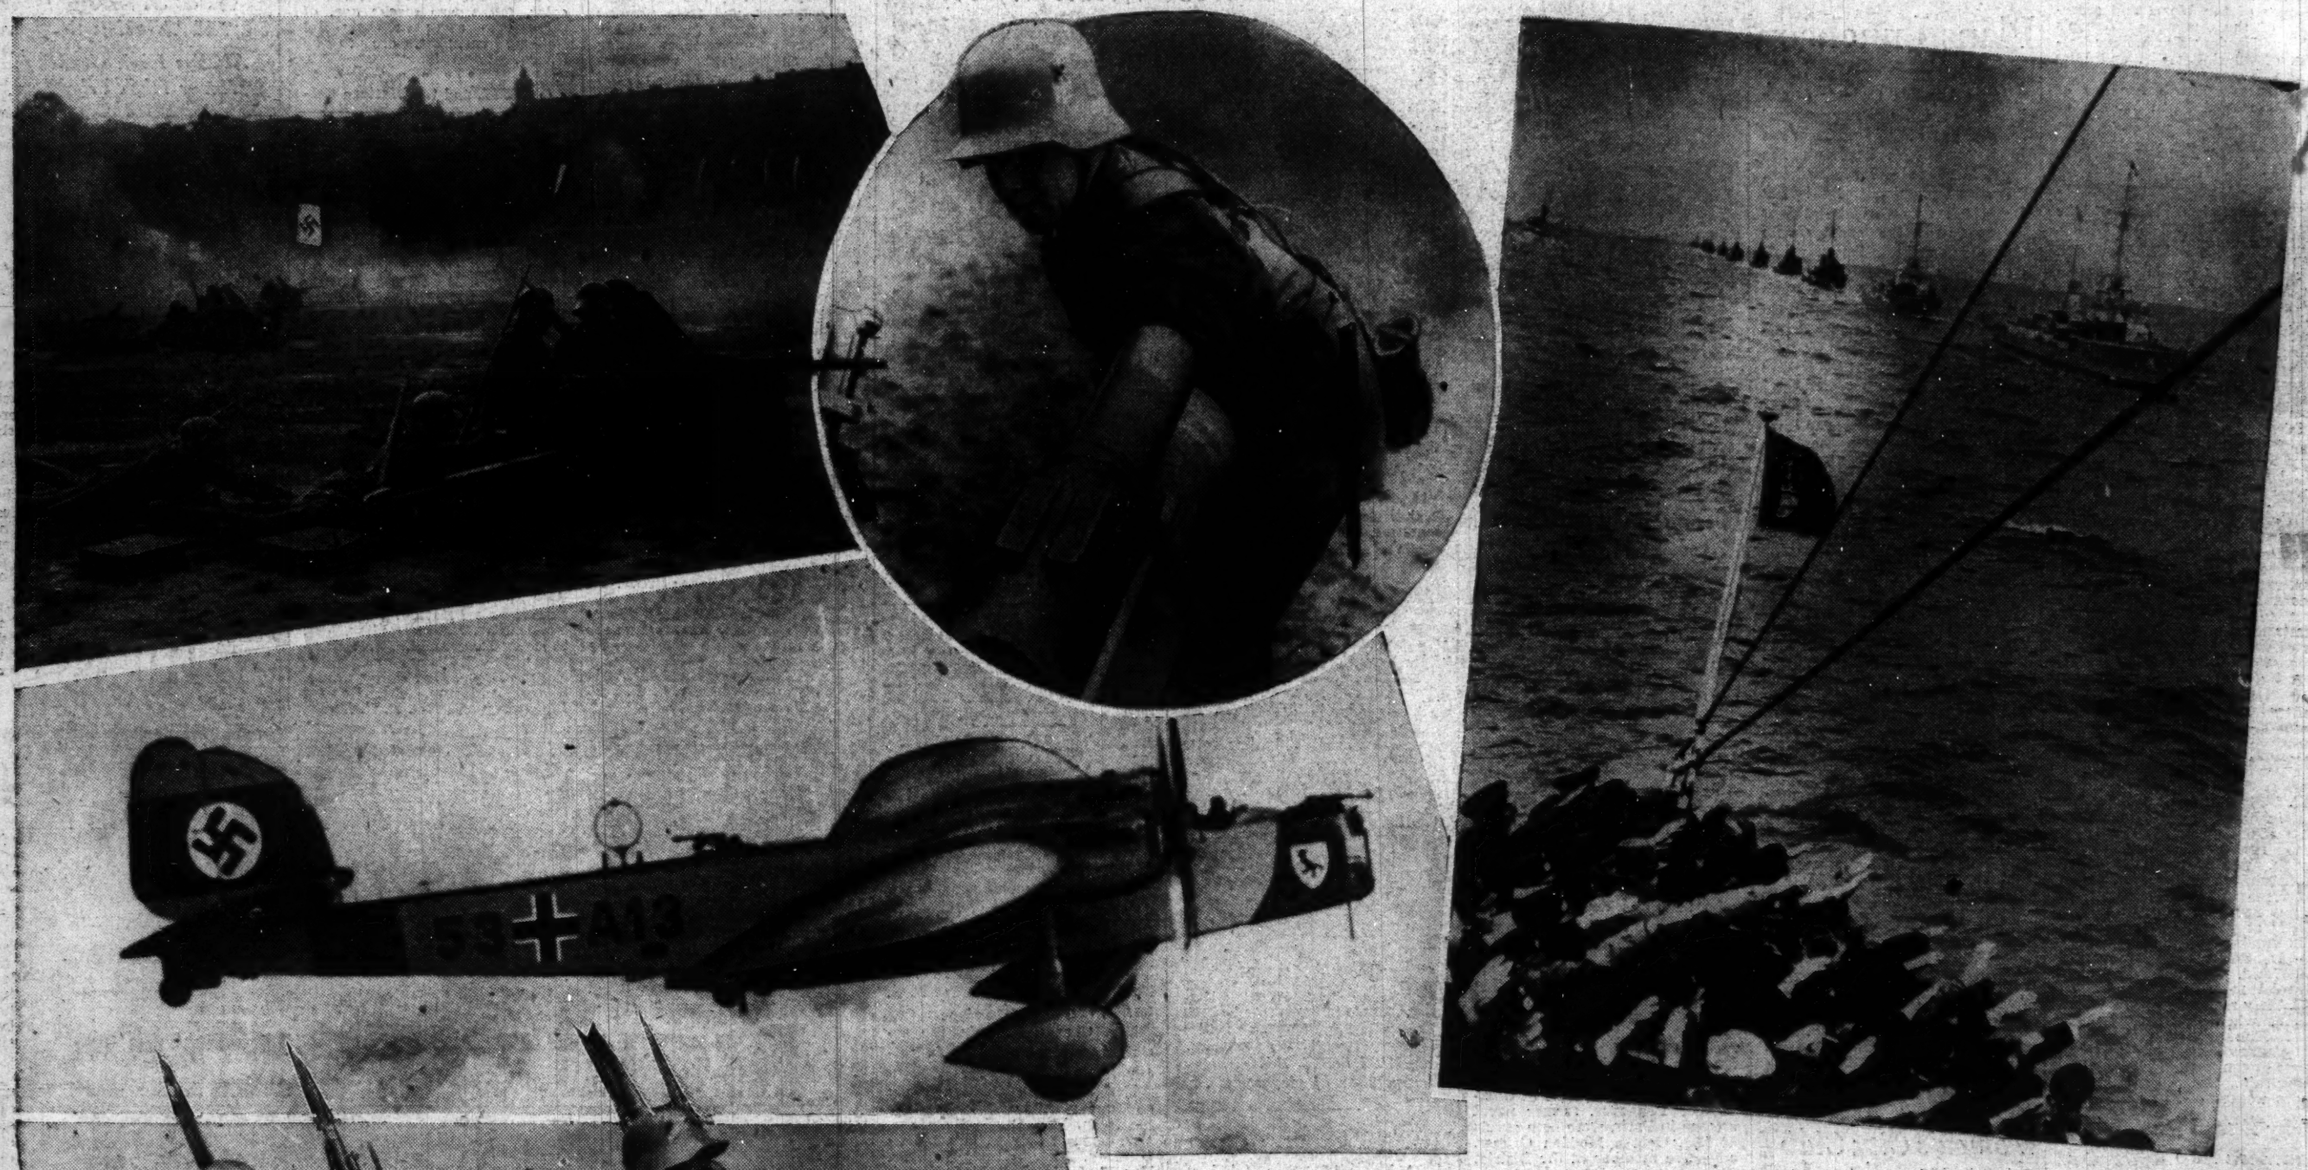
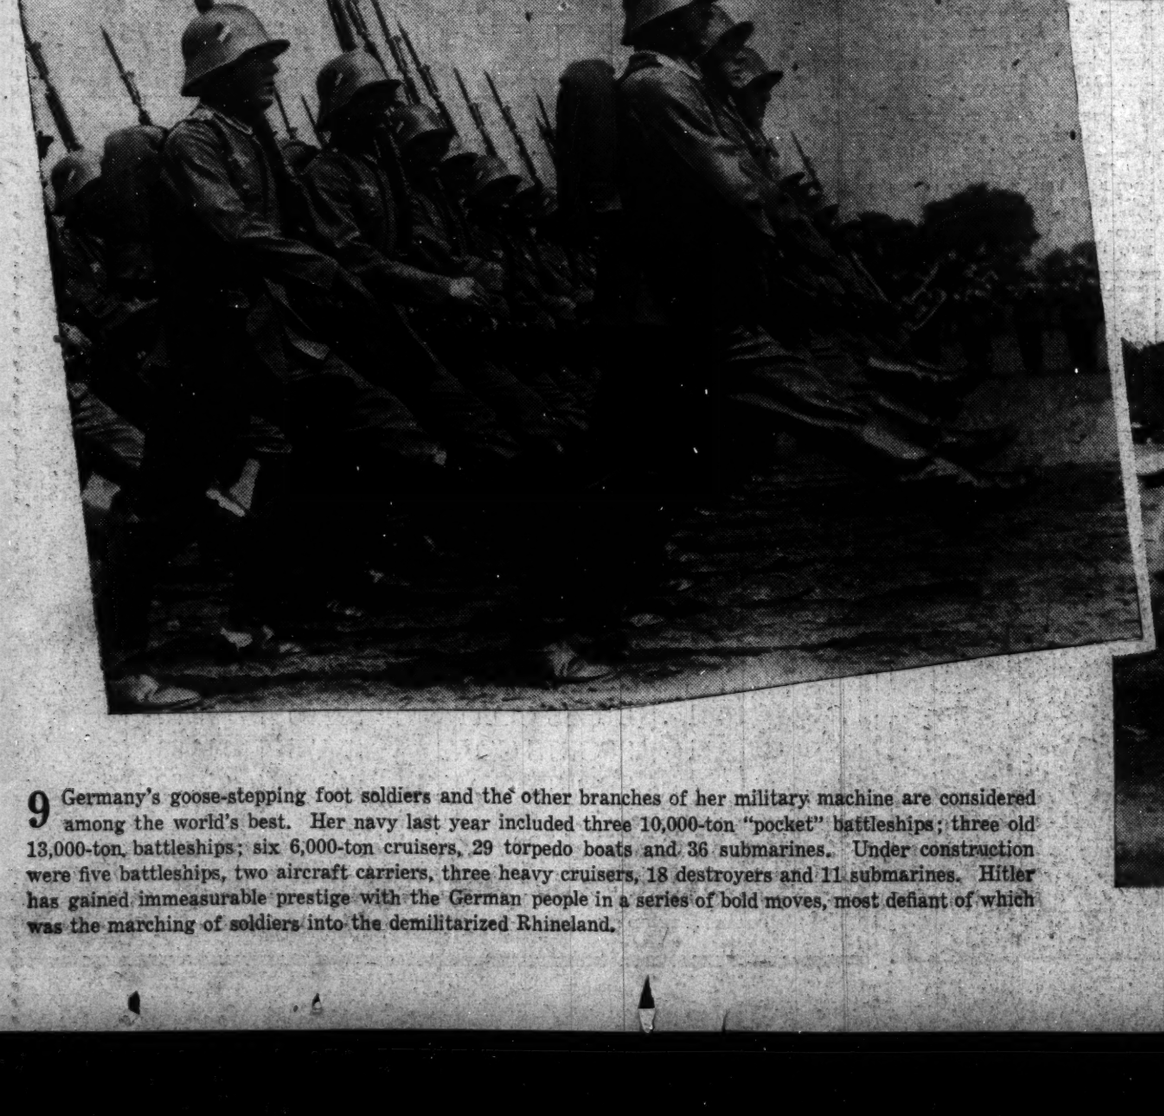
Envoy Recalled

7 Franz von Papen, Ambassador to Vienna, who was recalled. Ambassadors to Italy and Japan also were ordered home. Von Papen is in disfavor because of failure to pursue strong policy.



8 The armed forces which Hitler now commands directly are the fourth greatest in the world, exceeded only by Russia, Italy and France in that order, according to recent estimates. Representative branches of that armed might which sprang into prominence in March, 1936, when Hitler threw off the last shackles of the Versailles Treaty, are shown here. Germany's armed strength is a secret, but last year she reportedly had 650,000 active soldiers and 1,468,000 organized and trained reserves. Her strength in battle planes alone is estimated at 3,000.



9 Germany's goose-stepping foot soldiers and the other branches of her military machine are considered among the world's best. Her navy last year included three 10,000-ton "pocket" battleships; three old 13,000-ton battleships; six 6,000-ton cruisers, 29 torpedo boats and 36 submarines. Under construction were five battleships, two aircraft carriers, three heavy cruisers, 18 destroyers and 11 submarines. Hitler has gained immeasurable prestige with the German people in a series of bold moves, most defiant of which was the marching of soldiers into the demilitarized Rhineland.

By . . . HARLAN MILLER

IN DIPLOMATIC CODE.

(A suggested letter, to be written by Japan's Ambassador Saito at Washington to Japan's Emperor Hirohito at Tokyo.)

Dear Sun God: If some hot-pants American were to slap me on the kisser, would you and the admirals declare war?

* * * *

I wish you would tell our hooligans in China to stop roughing the Americans . . . Some overheated Yankee might give us a taste of it.

* * * *

And if our boys must rape Chinese girls, Hirohito, for pete's sake tell 'em to lay off the servants of the Americans . . . Makes it look as if we weren't in China for peaceful purposes.

"—would you declare war?"

Don't be misguided by all the hooey your foreign office is dishing out about American friendship for Japan . . . It ain't so, Sun God.

* * * *

If you were here in Washington you could see American officials wearing big buttons on their lapels with the slogan "Boycott the Japanese aggressors!"

* * * *

The same people who adored our Jap cherry trees in Washington now want them uprooted!

* * * *

Also, their little children are wearing buttons like that to kindergarten and on the schoolgrounds . . . . There's American friendship for you, Hirohito.

Emperor Hirohito, Ambassador Saito.

* * * *

Crime doesn't pay, Sun God, as their Edgar Hoover says, and the reason the Americans aren't on our necks right now is that they're smart enough to know that war doesn't pay.

It's up to you to decide whether Americans begin to wear silk undies or cotton socks.

* * * *

But don't make the mistake that your imperial cousin, Willie Hohenzollern, made a few years ago about American pacifism . . . And there's more than one way to skin an aggressor.

* * * *

"—don't make a mistake, Hirohito"

Personally, I get along all right with the Americans by dishing out a lot of baloney about liking Americans and drinking their whisky and behaving myself O. K.

* * * *

But this slapping of Americans has got to stop, Hirohito, or the Pacific won't be big enough.

* * * *

All kidding to one side, Emp, the Americans don't bear you any grudges, and they'll concede that you're the finest Sun God that ever walked the earth . . . But they'd like to see you make your little tin generals behave.

* * * *

I haven't been able to write you plainly before, on account of your being a Sun God and all that . . . But if your best friends won't tell you, I guess I must.

* * * *

Pardon my American accent, chief . . . . I've been over here a long time, and I know how these Americans think . . . . They'll be grinning right at you almost up to the minute when they sock you in the nose . . . .

In the language of diplomacy, your obedient servant, Saito.

Sleuth Recognizes Lottery Suspect as Liquor-Case Juror

When Sergt. George Deyoe, of the vice squad, arrested Claude M. Jones, colored, 36, 763 Morton street northwest, yesterday on a charge of operating a lottery, Deyoe thought he recognized the man. It took only a few questions to refresh the policeman's memory. Jones served on a Police Court jury two months ago that dismissed a liquor case in which Deyoe was the arresting officer.

Two other colored men arrested on "numbers" charges yesterday were Milton Stoc's, 41, 1639 Thirteenth street northwest, and Elijah Scott, 33, 2013 Ninth street northwest. The three were picked up separately.

2 New Crime Control Plans Are Studied

Seal Advocates Creation of Additional Police Judgeships.

Commissioners Prepare New Legislation for Congress.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Two measures to aid crime control in Washington were put forward yesterday, one to the District Commissioners, one by that body to Congress.

The Commissioners prepared to formulate a legislative program to broaden their own crime control powers, which will be submitted to Congress next week, while Elwood M. Seal, corporation counsel, advocated two additional Police Court judges. Creation of the two new judgeships each with a pay of $8,000 a year, would required congressional approval.

The move for additional judges was expected and it was disclosed the new Police Court building, which will be ready for use this month, already has provisions for additional judges. Approval of the suggestion was foreseen after Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, member of the Senate District Committee announced his willingness to cooperate with Commissioner to reduce crime in the District.

Preparatory to drawing up a legislative program aimed at reduction of crime, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said yesterday he would summon department heads for a conference at once.

All Plans in One Bill.

Proposed steps to rid the city of organized lawlessness and increase authority of the Commissioners, said Hazen, will be offered to Congress in a single bill. Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal will be directed to draft the measure after final plans are completed, he added.

The Commissioners' action followed a recent promise from Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, to grant city heads "unlimited powers" in their fight to control crime.

Another move toward increased police efficiency was seen when Hazen said he was "going to insist" that District inspectors show more activity by frequent personal contacts and tours of their respective jurisdictions.

Inspectors to Move Out.

"I don't think that high ranking officers ought to be sitting behind desks," he said, "I think they should be out on the job."

In line with the Commissioner's statement, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, said he would instruct his inspectors to spend "as much time as possible" on the streets and in the precincts.

In his conference with department heads, Hazen said recommendation contained in the Prettyman reorganization report will be considered as legislative proposals.

Hazen stressed two items as paramount to an improved crime record. These included consolidation of Metropolitan and Park Police forces, and a law requiring all criminals to register upon entering the city.

Commissioner Dan I. Sultan held the registration law as of primary importance.

Sultan Backs Registration Idea.

"We have no way at present," said Sultan, "to tell undesirable hoodlums and racketeers to 'get out and stay out.' If they are required by law to make their presence known, we will have a definite weapon with which to run them out."

Under the proposed rule, all persons with criminal records would be required to register at police headquarters, with a penalty for failure to comply if apprehended.

Although Metropolitan and Park Police co-operate under the present setup, Hazen predicted new efficiency would result from a merger.

In an effort to reduce the number of reported crimes in Washington, Maj. Brown urged a penalty for falsely reporting holdups, robberies and housebreakings. Approximately 600 false reports were made last year, he said.

He also scored persons who overestimate value of stolen goods, making it a grand larceny report, when it should be listed as petty larceny.

In this connection, he cited the case of a woman who recently reported the theft of a fur coat. Investigation, however, revealed the coat was four years old and present value was about $20.

Chinese Church Seeks $3,500 for New Home

Hopeful of obtaining an extension of the option, due to expire today, volunteer.. were busy yesterday in a last-minute drive to raise $3,500 cash needed to secure the proposed new home of the Chinese Community Church at 1325 Sixteenth street northwest.

The Rev. C. C. Hung, pastor, said if the campaign succeeds, activities of the congregation will be transferred from quarters in the Mount Vernon Place M. E. Church South. Mrs. W. A. McMillan, 1814 Belmont road, is treasurer of the drive, of which Ambassador C. T. Wang is honorary chairman.

10 Cities Draft National Drive Against Crime

Baltimore Man Elected Head of Criminal Justice Group.

Plans to combat crime on an intercity basis were formulated here yesterday by executives of Criminal Justice Associations in 10 cities in a meeting at the Willard Hotel.

The group voted to establish a bureau to furnish crime association heads with weekly bulletins reviewing development of methods in crime reduction. James M. Hepburn, managing director of the Baltimore Criminal Justice Association, was elected president of the group, and Wallace Reidt of Baltimore, secretary.

Meeting with the Baltimore delegates were Dr. James Allen Nolan, of the Washington Criminal Justice Association; and representatives of the following cities: New York, Newark, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Cincinatti, Pittsburgh, and Harrisburg.

Judge Arthur Hartshorn, president of the Interstate Commission on Crime, urged the need for establishing uniform State laws to deal with major crimes. He said that penalties for serious crimes had already been standardized in 28 States.

121st Engineers Mark Anniversary

Officers of the 121st Engineers, District National Guard, will celebrate the fifteenth anniversary of the regiment with a dinner and dance at 7:30 p. m. today at the Hotel Raleigh.

Among those who will attend are Senator George L. Radcliffe, Maryland; Representative C. A. Plumley, Vermont; Col. C. A. Dravo, U. S. Army; Col. S. L. Pike, U. S. Army; Maj.-Gen. A. H. Blanding, chief of the Militia Bureau; Lt. Col. P. S. Nevitt, Asst. Adj. Gen., D. C. Militia; Col. D. I. Sultan, Engineering Commission, D. C.; Col. J. Oehmann, D. C. N. G., who will act as toastmaster; Maj. R. S. Childs, D. C. N. G.; Maj. J. J. Greenlaw, regimental surgeon; Capt. James Quade, commanding Co. A; Capt. Wm. Mushaké, Co. B; Capt. Wm. Jorgensen, Co. C; Capt. Samuel Turner, Co. D; Capt. E. Knight, Co. E; Capt. Geo. Johus, Co. F; and Capt. Walter Welsh, Headquarters and Service Co.

Gullion and Vinson HonoredatBanquet

A banquet in honor of Maj. Gen. Allen W. Gullion, judge advocate general of the Army, and Representative Fred M. Vinson, recently appointed a judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, was held last night at the Cosmos Club by the Centre College Alumni Association of Washington.

Speakers, other than the guests of honor, were Former Senator A. Owsley Stanley, chairman of the International Joint Commission; Representative Emmet O'Neal, Edward W. Creal, and John M. Robsion, all of Kentucky.

Tributes were paid to the late Senator Nathan Bachman of Tennessee; the late Representative Glover Carey, of Kentucky, and the late Col. C. McChord.

William Jennings Price, former minister to Panama, and president of the association presided at the dinner.

Board Settles RestaurantPay, Tips' Inclusion

Decision Withheld Until Monday; Climaxes 2 Months of Hearings.

The Minimum Wage Board yesterday reached a decision on a legal weekly wage for women workers in the hotel restaurant and allied industries but withheld publication of the agreement until Monday.

"We have agreed substantially on the wage but we will have to wait until Monday before the official order is completed and signed by the members of the board," stated one member of the board.

After two months of public hearings, the wage conference finally went into executive session last Monday.

"The question of whether tips should be included in the minimum wage or not has been ironed out," it was announced.

Th employer group had submitted three proposed budgets ranging from $11.91 to $15.60. The employe representatives to the conference had submitted one budget which asked a weekly wage of $19.90 to all employes under the classification.

The board, which is composed of Mrs. William Kittle, chairman; Arthur Schoenthal, employe representative, and Claude H. Woodward, employer representative, will meet again Monday in executive session.

Jury Deadlocked For 7 Hours Over D. C. Cafe Slaying

After seven hours of deliberation a jury trying Louis J. Tapponier for the slaying of William M. Harris in a Ninth street cafe brawl last October 12, was locked up for the night in the Continental Hotel.

Justice Jesse C. Adkins sent the case to the jurors at 3:20 p. m. They will resume their discussions this morning.

Tapponier, 28-year-old former waiter, shot Harris on the early morning of October 12. Testimony showed that Harris, pictured by police as a rough-and-ready fighter, had beaten Tapponier earlier in the evening, had been arrested for it, and had gotten out of jail only a few minutes before he again encountered Tapponier.

Man Who Attacked Girl, 6, Is Hunted

Police searched the northeast section of the city last night for a well-dressed white man who attempted to criminally attack a 6-year-old girl near the B. & O. railroad tracks, in the neighborhood of the 5600 block of First street northeast.

The little girl, her sister, 3, and a companion 4, the mother said, had been playing when the stranger approached them and lured them across the tracks on the promise of candy.

Once there he removed the clothing from his intended victim and attempted the attack. Then he ran, after warning the children to stay where they were.

New Officers Are Elected By D. C. Chest

Coleman Jennings Is Chosen President; Succeeds Dodge.

Hellen, Taylor, Saul and Kaufman Are Vice Presidents.

Coleman Jennings, philanthropist and volunteer social worker, was elected president of the Community Chest yesterday at the first meeting of the new board of trustees. He succeeds Clarence Phelps Dodge, who completed four years of service as president.

Elected also were Arthur Hellen, first vice president; Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Wayne Chatfield Taylor, second vice president; John Saul, third vice president; Joseph D. Kaufman, fourth vice president; Alvin W. Hall, secretary.

Committeemen Named.

Dr. Dorothy Boulding Ferebee was elected member of the executive committee for one year to fill a vacancy. Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, Frank Lee and Charles Carroll Morgan were elected members of the executive committee to serve two years. The executive committee is composed of the six officers elected yesterday, the treasurer, H. L. Rust, jr., elected in December; the campaign chairman, William J. Flather, jr.; the publicity chairman, Charles B. Dulcan, sr., and J. S. Gorrell, chairman of the budget committee. The two holdover members are Lawrence Choate and Mrs. John A. Selby. In addition to these there will be six more members appointed by the new president.

Jennings has served in many capacities with the Chest, being campaign chairman during 1936. Hellen has served as general counsel for the Chest, has worked with the special assignments unit and has held the office of secretary, being identified with the movement continuously since the Chest was organized. Taylor, a comparatively new comer, serving last year as chairman of the Government unit. Saul, president of the B. F. Saul Co., and former president of the Board of Trade, has also been identified with the Chest in many capacities, working at various times with the special assignments and group solicitation units and service as vice president, member of the executive committee and member of the board of trustees.

Kaufman Long Chest Aid.

Kaufman, president of D. J. Kaufman, Inc., also has been identified with the Chest since it was first organized. He has been active in every campaign, serving with the special assignments unit, as chairman of the metropolitan unit for two years and as chairman of the publicity unit for four years. Hall, who is director of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, has been especially identified with boys' work and has served as division chairman in the Government unit.

Dr. Ferebee, a physician, is president of the Washington Welfare Association, which operates Southeast Settlement House. Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith has served with the Chest since its organization in practically every capacity. She has worked with the special assignment and metropolitan units, has been on the executive committee, the board of trustees and has been vice president of the Chest.

Frank Lee is also a new comer to Chest ranks. He is vice president of the City Bank and chairman of the board of trustees of the Central Labor Union and has always taken an active interest in Chest work.

Deficit Reduced.

Morgan has worked continuously with the special assignment unit and served as its chairman in 1935.

Clarence Phelps Dodge, the retiring president, in his final talk yesterday, welcomed the new members of the board of trustees and again called attention to the inability of the Chest to divert funds from one group of agencies in order to aid another group. He was referring to the relief situation, which has grown to such magnitude that family welfare agencies financied by the Chest are utterly unable to cope with it.

H. L. Rust, jr., treasurer, reported that through careful management the Chest had been able, during 1937, to reduce its deficit from approximately $169,000 to $101,000.

Salvation Army Greets New Head

Maj. Charles H. Dodd, newly appointed divisional Salvation Army commander in the District and Northern Virginia, with Mrs. Dodd, were installed last night at ceremonies in Army headquarters, led by Lieut. Commissioner Ernest I. Pugmire, in charge of the Southern area. Among those who welcomed the new officers were Clarence Phelps Dodge, president of the Community Chest; Mrs. Elwood Street, wife of the District public welfare director, and the Rev. Horace E. Cromer, president of the Washington Federation of Churches. More than 500 persons attended.

Dr. R. H. Long Praises Local Lutheran Unit

Executive Director Lauds D. C. Inner Mission at Roll Call Banquet.

"All the misery and sorrow around us is the result of sin, the effort to live without God," Dr. Ralph H. Long, of New York executive director of the National Lutheran Council, declared last night at the annual Lutheran Inner Mission Roll-Call banquet.

Praising the work of the Washington Inner Mission, Dr. Long said, "a world full of distress and unrest needs the ministration of this society."

The church has been oppressed in Germany, he asserted, "because there were charges that it failed to meet its obligations in the social field.

"I wonder if American churches may not some day have to answer that charge."

Service in the social field has an invigorating effect on the church which performs it, as well as those who receive its direct benefits, Dr. Long said.

Welcoming 250 diners to the Church of the Reformation, the Rev. Dr. Oscar Blackwelder, pastor, described Lutheran unity as "one of the greatest needs of Washington and the Nation."

"If our forefathers had the right to separate," he said, "we, their descendants surely have the right to unite."

Reporting total returns of $5,660 for the 1938 Inner Mission Roll Call in Washington, Irving Koch, treasurer, warned that, "this looks like a heavy relief year. The need may become as great as at the bottom of the depression."

Other speakers at the banquet included the Rev. Henry J. Manken, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Incarnation, and Miss Frances Dysinger, director of the local Inner Mission.

Georgetown Opens Dentists' Clinic

An all day clinic on dental problems arranged for alumni of Georgetown University opens at 9:45 a. m. today at the School of Dentistry on Reservoir road. About 500 alumni, many from nearby States, will attend.

The alumni held a dance last night at the Wardman Park Hotel. A dinner at the school will feature tonight's program.

Alumni scheduled for special lectures today include Dr. William A. Duffy, of New Haven, Conn.; Dr. F. W. Nash, of Scranton, Pa.; Dr. James G. Townsend, of the United States Public Health Service, and Dr. Wilson R. Conran, of Hartford, Conn. The Rev. Wilfrid J. Parsons, S. J., professor of political science at Georgetown, will speak on "Today's Social Problem and the Dentist." Dr. Maurice A. Goldberg is general chairman and Dr. Philip Robin is chairman of the scientific section.

Printers' Union Votes Benefits ToUnemployed

Local Group Sets Aside $1,000 for Immediate Relief Payments.

Special benefits for unemployed members of Columbia Typographical Union were voted yesterday in a referendum. The vote was 941 to 834.

Immediate transfer of $1,000 from the general fund was ordered to provide benefits. The resolution permits the president to set up a special committee of three to supervise payments.

They will be permitted to pay out of work benefits up to $20 a week for married and $15 for unmarried members. Persons already receiving income from private sources or Government funds will be eligible for benefits sufficient to bring their income up to the union's maximum relief figures.

Officers said last night the relief provision was the first voted by the union membership since 1932.

Officials estimated that about 10 per cent of the membership of 3,000 are unemployed.

Nine Firms Fail In Second Attack On Privilege Tax

A second assault upon the District's business privilege tax went down to defeat in District Court yesterday when a three-judge tribunal held nine firms contesting the law not entitled to sue for injunction.

The judges, Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner, of the United States Court of Appeals, Chief Justice A. A. Wheat, of District Court, and associate Justice James M. Proctor, also of District Court, ruled that complainants had an adequate remedy at law—not in equity.

The Court inferentially opined the tax should be paid under protest and a law suit brought to recoup the money from the District Government. They did not pass upon constitutionality of the tax.

Revenue Bill To Save D. C. $1,800,000

Rep. Nichols Sees Cut in Taxes if Act Passes in Present Form.

Says Real Estate Levy May Be Reduced From $1.75 to $1.60.

District taxpayers would be saved $1,800,000 a year should tax reductions in the new revenue bill be adopted by Congress, Chairman Nichols (Democrat), Oklahoma, of the fiscal affairs subcommittee of the House District Committee, indicated yesterday.

Nichols said a cut in the District real estate tax rate from $1.75 to $1.60 in the next fiscal year could be directed in the bill. The District, he said, could raise more than enough to cover anticipated deficits in the budget through three sources already considered by his subcommittee.

These sources, Nichols pointed out, would include continuation of a modified business privilege tax, an income tax, and a real estate tax rate above the $1.50 in force before the current fiscal year. The committee intended originally, he said, to recommend continuance of the present $1.75 real estate tax but feels, on the basis of recent budget reports, that this burden might be eased.

It was pointed out that the 1939 appropriation bill, as it passed the House, will incur a deficit not exceeding $3,000,000. A real estate tax of $1.60, instead of $1.75, Nichols said, would raise $1,200,000 over the income from the previous $1.50 levy. Tax income from other sources, he said, would more than cover the anticipated deficit.

3 Women Fined $25 for Dances At Md. 'Smoker'

Three women of a dancing troupe which provided entertainment at a smoker at the Hollywood Inn, Camp Springs, Md., paid fines of $25 each in police court at Upper Marlboro yesterday on charges of disorderly conduct.

Arrested by Prince Georges County police in a raid led by Superintendent Arthur W. Hepburn, the women gave their names as Mrs. Mary Sherman, 33, of 5800 block of Colorado avenue northwest; Helen May, 29, and Audrey Dare, 21, both of Baltimore. A fourth member of the troupe was acquitted.

Police also arrested George Cokinos, 21, described as the owner of the club, and charged him with operating a disorderly house. His trial was postponed until next Friday.

Gallinger Fugitive Gives Himself Up

William B. Patton, 19-year-old holdup suspect who escaped from the psychopathic ward at Gallinger late Thursday, voluntarily returned to District jail yesterday.

Hailing a taxi on Connecticut avenue, Patton asked driver Roy F. Parks, 1707 Q street northwest, to take him to the jail. There he pounded on the door until a guard answered, recognized Patton as the man for whom police had been looking diligently for 10 hours, and admitted him. Patton will not be returned to Gallinger, jail officials said, but kept in the District jail.

Young Love Is Given Innings In Earle Film

'You're Only Young Once' Proves Fit for Family; Ted Weems a Hit.

"YOU'RE ONLY YOUNG ONCE." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a screen play by Kay Van Riper, based upon characters created by Aurania Rouverol, featuring Lewis S. Stone, Cecilia Parker, Mickey Rooney, Fay Holden, Frank Craven, Ann Rutherford, Sara Haden and Charles Judels. Directed by George B. Seitz. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris. At the Earle Theater.

Roast beef, in its own way, is quite as tasty as caviar and a good custard pie can stand comparison with any French pastry. Which is just a lead-up to saying that "You're Only Young Once," while suitable and wholesome film fare for the whole family, is also jolly and diverting in spite of its respectability.

Most of the credit for this happy entertainment must go to Master Mickey Rooney, ebullient and irresponsible. But equally enjoyable in a different way is the polished performance of Lewis Stone who is by way of becoming the grand old man of the screen. His is the sort of acting so perfectly skillful that it hardly seems like acting.

"You're Only Young Once" is the story of a family on vacation. The family includes the judge and his wife, their pretty daughter and son, Mickey. The set-up and the development of the story is a bit reminiscent of the very successful "State Fair" of a few years ago. True, the family goes clear to Catalina Island instead of the State fair, but the youngsters of the family in both stories get over their heads in love affairs with city slickers and are glad to return to their home-town sweeties.

A Screen Kiss.

Mickey Rooney's entanglement with a gilded 16-year-old, who is waiting at Catalina for her mother to return from Reno, is among the choicer screen love affairs from its inception (Mickey trips her up to attract attention) through the high-power kissing that leaves Mickey shouting "Woo! Woo!" right to the bitter end when the kids keep a late rendezvous for no good reason and Mickey has to walk home—20 miles.

Sister Cecilia Parker has worse luck than her pesky young brother. She falls in love with a handsome lifeguard who hornswoggles her with a yarn about his blighted law career and a wife whom he wants to divorce. After going out with him, getting tight on three drinks and considering herself engaged, it turns out that the life guard has never seen the inside of a law school, that he is happily married to some girl who is toiling in a gown shop, while he poses on the beach. So-o-o Cecilia and Mickey pick up their marbles and go home, considerably wised up on the technic of summer love affairs.

"Good Looking Winners" is a Grantland Rice short devoted to pictures of pretties who surpass in sports. It's a nice number. The noted Canadian mounties figure in a semimusical, done in color, and acted so quaintly that its tragic and romantic scenes are entertaining in a comedy sense.

Admiral Sellers, retiring head of the Naval Academy, contributed a startling, if hardly diplomatic, note to the newsreel by declaring that the United States will "undoubtedly go to war again."

Weems Unit Clicks.

Ted Weems and his big crew of musicians and entertainers proved an audience delight with Red Ingle and his squeaky fiddle registering most of the laughs. Ted introduces the movies into his act with a short of that mountain feudist song that you hear every time you turn on the radio. The "Wreck of the Old '97" was among the Weems novelty numbers.

The dancing Readinger Twins offer a dainty trickery of steps that sets their act high in its class. Tap dancer Gloria Fay not only has sophisticated feet, but she wears a white lace coat that is something new in stage attire. Magician Tommy Martin has a number of smart tricks, the best being turning a piece of paper into an egg.

The Earle Theater orchestra puts on some very smart stunts this week. Under the direction of Jo Lombardi the Earle musicians offer a succession of well-done impressions of famous orchestras.

Metropolitan

"PENITENTIARY." Columbia pictures filmization of a play by Martin Flavin, adapted to the screen by Fred Niblo, jr., and Seton I. Miller, featuring Walter Connolly, John Howard and Jean Parker, with Robert Barrat, Marc Lawrence, Arthur Hohl, Dick Curtis and Paul Fix. Directed by John Brahm. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Sally Stroud. At the Metropolitan Theater.

"Penitentiary" is another story of men behind the bars, which is lifted above the level of "program picture" by the fine acting of youngster John Howard and oldster Walter Connolly. At times you may wonder why something was said or done in the way it was, but for the most part, you will probably applaud silently at the intensity and sincerity of the playing.

Aside from the romance, which sometimes sighs gently and almost expires, the dialogue and acting are fine and expressive. Faces stand out from the mob of prisoners—notably Jack, with his close-cropt head and coal-black eyes; Tex, tall, scar-faced and heartless; Brunch, the squealer, furtive, cringing, and French, the lifer, quiet, composed.

Young John Howard should gain stardom with his portrayal of Bill Jordan. Sans make-up, he actually seems to become calloused, hopeless, desperate, as the prisoner he plays. There is nothing "hammy" about his performance. It is probably the best chance he has had, and he capitalizes on the break and makes Bill Jordan a person you will have trouble forgetting.

Walter Connolly as Warden Matthews almost makes the first part of the movie, just when it is bogging down a bit with explanatory detail. His rapid method of speaking slurs off some of the unworthiness of a small percentage of his lines.

As Elizabeth, Jean Parker, whose voice is reminiful of J. Arthur's, is good. She, too, is natural, possessing an unaffected charm.

Robert Barrat as the yard-boss is a nasty old meanie and he gets his'n, which is what he deserves—along with a bouquet for being such an effective villain.

This picture can be forgotten easily. It is not a great picture, but it is sincere, and it does handle an oft-handled theme with fresh gloves.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

'The Buccaneer,' at Palace, Is a De Mille Triumph; Star Cast Scores in 'Everybody Sings,' at Capitol

Fredric March Is Superb as Jean Lafitte With Tamiroff Next.

"THE BUCCANEER." Cecil B. De Mille's "silver anniversary" picturization for Paramount of Jeanie MacPherson's story based on Lyle Saxon's novel of "Lafitte the Pirate," adapted to the screen by Edwin Justus Mayer, Harold Lamb and C. Gardner Sullivan, starring Fredric March with Franciska Gaal, Akim Tamiroff, Margot Grahame, Walter Brennan, Anthony Quinn, Ian Keith, Douglas Dumbrille, Beulah Bondi, Robert Barrat, Fred Kohler, Hugh Southern, Spring Byington, Montagu Love, Gilbert Emery, Holmes Herbert, Lina Basquette, Ethel Claytonn, Buddy Roosevelt and scores more, supported by an ensemble of thousands. Directed by Cecil B. De Mille. At Loew's Palace Theater.

A strange amalgamation of glamorous and heroic piracy and governmental chicanery, mixed with an impressive fidelity to truth and patriotic idealism is presented in this monument to the genius of Cecil B. De Mille as a producer-director of unexampled vision and skill.

BELL.

The Battle of New Orleans and Andrew Jackson's contribution to the building of the Union form the basis of the turbulent action that marks this as one of the most vibrant and exciting camera dramas over which De Mille ever has presided. There is woven into the story, of course, a strong thread of romantic drama and a great deal of exhilarating comedy, with the amazing career of Jean Lafitte, pirate and patriot, as a motivating power in every climacteric period of the play.

There are combined in this subject all of the stirring elements of spectacle, mass movement, tremendous conflict and pictorial splendor for which its producer always has been noted. There is, in addition, an integrity, an authenticity and a degree of individualized drama that stamps De Mille as a director of imagination, resourcesfulness and diversified approach to the requirements of far-flung and epic screen portraiture.

Only occasionally—very occasionally—does Hollywood theatricalism obtrude itself in the unfolding of this bold and highly colored recital of events that were vital to the development of the United States. The most flagrant evidence of this slight straining for extravagant effect manifests itself in the naval bombardment of Barataria, the pirate stronghold, by official renegades intent on perfecting their own plots for power. This scene savors a little of the artificial and the "staged," but is still so thrilling that it cannot be stigmatized as a blemish on an enormously brilliant gem of creative effort.

White House Burns.

The period of the picture is the tempestuous era of the War of 1812, when the British sacked the White House, and Dolly Madison, with rare presence of mind, in a moment of imminent peril, saved the Declaration of Independence from falling into alien and destructive hands. The action progresses from this episode to the concentration of American resources in New Orleans to avert a fatal defeat. It is here that that strikingly romantic piratical gentleman, Jean Lafitte, and his blood-thirsty, but jovial, buccaneers enter the scene and save the day, even with a handsome price on Lafitte's head as the arch-enemy of law-abiding society.

As I have said, there is a wealth of fictional by-play embellishing the entire movement of the story. Lafitte is not immune to the charms of beautiful and gracious young womanhood, and his chief gunner, Dominique You, former cannoneer with Napoleon, also is susceptible to the charms of silken femininity. Counterpointing these purely "entertainment" elements of the expansive story is the grim and steadfast Americanism of "Andy" Jackson and the intimate comedy of Ezra Peavey, his orderly. So much more enters into the fabrication of this splendidly formulated adventure among grandiose figures and stupendous deeds that a brief review can hope to accomplish no more than to sketch a few of the highlights of a produition that shines with many virtues and is dimmed by remarkably few faults.

"The Buccaneer" is the beneficiary of some extraordinarily able playing by Fredric March, Akim Tamiroff, Margot Grahame, Hugh Sothern, Walter Brennan and literally hundreds of others, among them Ian Keith, Beulah Bondi, Dumbrille and the long list of others partially catalogued at the top of this column.

March's Best Role.

Never has Fredric March brought to the screen so dynamic a performance as he gives here. His Jean Lafitte is a polished rascal and noble criminal whose personal charm was such that even those who had placed the price on his head were willing to strike a bargain with him to avoid the infliction of their penalties. Next to Mr. March comes Akim Tamiroff, in the role of Dominque You, who will be thought by some to "steal the picture," because his role is a magnificently flamboyant creation that affords him the most generous opportunities he ever has had before the cameras in this country. Hugh Sothern's Andrew Jackson also is a superlative demonstration of keen and effective portrayal.

Frasciska Gaal, the much-vaunted leading figure in the play's romantic trends, it seems to me, might have been replaced by any number of Hollywood ingenues without serious impairment of the drama's forcefulness. Walter Brennan, as Ezra Peavey, tops his every previous comic performance by playing a simple backwoodsman with complete and devastating faithfulness to type. Margot Grahame is lovely and alluring.

There are photographic effects in "The Buccaneer" that never have been equaled for sheer beauty.

There are, needless to say, supplementary features o. the Palace's current bill but they will be submerged in memory under the sweeping magnificence of "The Buccaneer."

Not a Pipe.

Unlike most Britishers who are inveterate pipe smokers, Errol Flynn has never had one between his lips. He smokes cigarettes.

The Dutch Girl and the Pirates

FRANCISKA GAAL AND AKIM TAMIROFF, the foreground figures, of course, as they appear in Cecil B. DeMille's production of "The Buccaneer," at Loew's Palace Theater. Mr. Tamiroff does the best work of his American screen career in the role of Dominique You, former gunner with the armies of Napoleon, now in the Louisiana bayous.

Judy Garland Proves Her Right to Stellar Note Among Veterans.

"EVERYBODY SING." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of an original story and screen play by Florence Ryerson and Edgar Allan Woolf, featuring Allan Jones, Fanny Brice, Judy Garland, Reginald Owen, Billie Burke, Reginald Gardiner, Lynne Carver, Monty Woolley, Henry Armetta and Adia Kuznetzoff. Directed by Edwin L. Marin. Previewed February 1. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

Drenched with melody, bristling with comic moments and demonstratating once more Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's peculiar capacity for lending pictorial importance to inconsequential stories, "Everybody Sings" takes its place among the better of the season's musical exhibits.

The fragile yarn may be epitomized in that ancient and largely counterfeit fetich of the theater, "The show must go on." The whole merry business hinges upon the staging of a serious play by a harried playwright—and its ultimate failure—and the production of a gorgeous musical by tyros without distinguished names or previous reputations. The thing has been done innumerable times before, but never with quite the finesse or the many surprises that are revealed on the Capitol's screen this week.

The most amazing thing about this picture is Judy Garland. The youthful Garland has sung a song for the sound tracks now and again and has made a pretty happy name for herself in the process, but never has she even vaguely intimated the remarkable talents for comedy and the maintenance of character portrayal that she discloses in the role of the kid expelled from school who cannot get the ear of any of her family and so steps out on her own and proves a bit of a genuis. This youngster, who, I believe, is not over 15 years old, is a born comedienne, as well as a songstress endowed with a sparkling and an unerring sense of rhythm and a bit of a voice. She plays with such veterans as Fanny Brice, Billie Burke, Reginald Owen and the other adult members of the cast and concedes them nothing. It is a remarkable achievement for one so young.

Miss Brice Is a Hit.

Fanny Brice also takes a top place among the funsters whose stage antics are nicely attuned to the requirements of the cameras. Her "Snooks" and "Quainty, Dainty Me" numbers are comic gems.

And Billie Burke! As the actress-wife of the frenzied playwright, Miss Burke contributes gloriously to the humorous pre-eminence of a figment that goes seriously gay and hilariously tuneful in a slightly new treatment of an old and threadbare theme. Reginald Owen is perfectly cast as her harassed spouse.

Then there are Allan Jones, with his splendid voice and an expanding sense of comedy and a growing skill as an actor; Reginald Gardiner, who isn't quite as amusing as I expected him to be; Lynne Carver, the "heart interest" in Mr. Jones' life—and Mr. Jones is cast as the vocal chef in her bankrupt home—Henry Armetta and many others who lend vivacity and ebullient spirit to this completely merry masquerade. They all do extremely well with the material at hand. And it is rich material.

The songs you will remember are "The One I Love," "Down on Melody Farm," "Swing, Mr. Mendelssohn" and "On With the Show," in addition to those already mentioned. Miss Brice's ace number, by the way, is "Snooks. Why? Because," sung with the fabulous Garland.

The final climax is done in M-G-M's typically opulent manner, with a stageful of girls and an ensemble that would pack the Ellipse.

Stage Show Excels.

The stage bill at the Capitol this week keeps step with the screen feature. It is presided over by those two eminent zanies, Marty Collins and Harry Peterson, already known to every theatergoer in Washington. The boys work from the ramp in front of the orchestra and have the time of their lives. No two comedians I know have such a fund of comedy "gags" and routines upon which to draw as these two. Furthermore, they are ad-libbers of the first rank, quick on the mental and verbal triggers, and lend the whole frolic an intimate informality that gives the stage goings-on an entirely new note.

Among the talented specialists they introduce are Sally Burrill and Herman Hyde, whose comedy is top-notch and whose musicianship is even funnier; Ray and Geraldine Hudson, two of the most astounding acrobatic dancers that have come along in a blue moon; Dawn Tage, a ballet dancer of the first rank, and the 24 Chester Hale Girls, who are the last word in cutaneous charm and precision dancing. Their fan routine is one of the most entrancing things seen on a local stage in many a day and their Grenadiers number is done with West Point unity of movement.

The Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's overture add to the overflowing measure of entertainment being ladled out at the Capitol this week. I suggest that you do not let it get away.

Hollywood, Feb. 4.—Idol Chatter: Publicity item says Mae West plays trap drums in her dressing room for relaxation—wonder how the people in the adjoining rooms relax? Talk alikes: Ginger Rogers and Barbara Stanwyck. Wish something could be done about Jane Brian's annoying habit of drawing designs on the tablecloth with her fork. Sign on a Columbia stage: "Absolutely no visitors—positively no exceptions"—they must mean the set is closed! Hollywood's most clothes-conscious lady since Lilyan Tashman is Gail Patrick.

GINGER ROGERS.

Harold Lloyd's luck at any card game is absolutely uncanny. Hollywood hobbyhorsemen: Lew Ayres, amateur sculptor—and he does not welcome smart-cracks about his "busts." Grace Moore has been accused of many things—but never of being a spendthrift. Movie gals who wear anything less revealing than shorts are considered positively indecent in Palm Springs. A beggar who sells pencils near the Brown Derby claims that Lupe Velez is the most generous star—she considers it insulting to give less than a dollar.

John Barrymore still totes a press badge and likes to flash it to prove he was once a newspaper reporter. Hollyw-oddities: Wallace Beery, the "Old Soak" of many a scren role, is one of Filmville's few teetotalers. Always suspect Joan Blondell of being a contortionist when I see her twine her feet around the legs of a chair. Height of something or other: A psycho-analyst's signed statement that Martha Raye is the victim of an inferiority complex.

A letter this morning from a young miss in Atlanta who expresses considerable indignation because Clark Gable allows his name to be romantically linked with that of Carole Lombard—while everyone knows perfectly well that he is still married to Rhea Gable. "If he wants to have romances, why doesn't he get a divorce?" she demands. While admitting the superficial justice of the young lady's observations, it strikes me that Gable is in something of a spot about all this. The understanding I have gleaned from intimate friends of the Gables is that he would like nothing better than a divorce—and Mrs. Gable refuses to give him one. The situation has an angle that may be amusing to the rest of the world, yet I doubt that it gives Clark any chuckles. Unless some secret agreement has been made to the contrary—and such agreements never remain a secret for long—Mrs. Rhea Gable, under the California community property laws, is entitled to exactly one-half of that princely salary that Clark receives each week.

Speaking of married couples, I am reminded of the Jackie Coogans—and the reminder is painful. Seems only yesterday that Jackie was toddling around the Chaplin Studios in "The Kid." It was something of a shock to me—and probably to a lot of you readers—to realize that that 3-year-old has sprung up to man's estate and taken a wife. I am living in daily dread of the telephone call that will advise me that Jackie Coogan and Betty Grable are "Expecting." On my way to the radio station to broadcast that news item, I am going to stop off long enough to buy a crutch.

Stopped in on the Jane Withers set this morning and found that young lady struggling to bear up under a crushing grievance. Seems, according to the story told by her mother, that Jane visited the San Diego Zoo a few days ago and there saw—and fell head over heels in love with—a porcupine. She wanted one for a pet, but Mrs. Withers—who apparently does not care for porcupines—said "No." "Jane has too many pets now," she explained to me. "Let's see—we have 5 dogs, 4 cats, 12 chickens, 2 carrier pigeons, 1 guinea pig, 2 alligators, 2 baby goats, 6 turtles, 4 love birds, 1 horned toad, 2 chameleons and an aquarium of tropical fish. I do not want to be inconsiderate—but it seems to me that should be enough!"

"RADIO CITY REVELS." RKO-Radio picturization of the story by Matt Brooks featuring Bob Burns, Jack Oakie, Ann Miller, Kenny Baker, Helen Broderick, Victor Moore, Milton Berle, Melissa Mason, Buster West and Jane Froman. Directed by Ben Stoloff. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

Very mild entertainment, this. Apparently there were some good catchy hummable tunes, some pleasand talented people, and one good gag lying around loose on the lot, so RKO-Radio bundled them all together and made "revels" out of them—but not revelry.

One gag, no matter how funny, can't stretch out to feature picture length without either snapping or getting pretty thin. This one is funny, but it is also very thin indeed before you are through with it.

Lester Robin, of the Van Buren (Ark.) Robins, is a sleep-song-writer. That is—in case you haven't heard of the breed before, and we hadn't—a gentleman who dreams beautiful melodies complete with words, and dreams them so vividly that he sings loudly between snores and beats time with his hands. When he wakes up, they are only a memory.

Fortunately for all concerned, Lester falls into the toils of Harry Miller, a song writer minus new song ideas, awake or asleep, and his pianist. These two sit up nights, noting down tunes and lyrics as they slip from Lester's subconcious. Prosperity arrives suddenly, a new radio program is born and all is well until Lester, hopelessly in love, develops insomnia!

This "major" plot item is helped or hindered, as you wish, by romances—the lady who wants a man and can't get any, and the lady who is wanted by three men—and by "dances, songs and numbers."

Bob Burns, Jack Oakie and Milton Berle are consistently amusing, without any particular brilliance, as Lester, Harry and the pianist, respectively, with Bob Burns winning over the other two by a comfortable margin. If Oakie gets much fatter, his eyes will be completely lost in that round face. Berle is really funny.

Helen Broderick is the man-less lady and, we can't understand it. You'd think someone would realize that she is fun to have around and that she is attractive, crisp and amusing.

Ann Miller and Kenny Baker are pallid and uninteresting, in fact, downright dull as the young lovers. Miss Miller is a talented tap dancer; the coy Mr. Baker sings more than pleasantly, but they were not born to act.

Victor Moore is also around with far too little to do and Jane Froman is a stimulating and persuasive singer of elegant songs.

Most memorable of the songs are "New Moon Over the Old Mill" (reminiscent of several earlier hits as well as memorable); "Taking a Shine to You," "Take a Tip From the Tulips," and anything and everything Miss Froman sings. Hal Kemp and his orchestra back them up excellently. Melissa Mason, the double double-jointed lady, and Buster West, that ace of dancers, participate along with Bob Burns, his bazooka, some sepia steppers and spirited music. This is the nearest to real revels we could spot.

The Pathe News and a short reel, "Pathe Parade," complete the bill.

Family Affair.

With Lola, Rosemary and Priscilla Lane all currently working in pictures their mother prepares a favorite dessert for them and takes it to the studio where the four of them have lunch together every day. Five, that is, counting Wayne Morris.

Columbia

The major point of interest in "Love and Hisses," which resumed its downtown run at Loew's Columbia Theater yesterday, rests in the revlation of a surprisingly clear, true and delightful coloratura voice by that demure little pouter, Simone Simon, who is cast in the principal feminine role. Mlle. Simon, who now lies desperately ill in a Hollywood hospital, is a youthful singer of the first rank, who proves it by making the "Bell Song" from "Lakme" her first number on the screen.

The rest of the procedure is devoted to that celebrated bit of counterfeit feuding between Ben Bernie and his columnist pal. They rig up some very elegant situations indeed, each for the discomfiture of the other. The whole plot structure has about it the tang of Broadway and the night spots and creates frequent opportunity for the introduction of catchy songs and dance-floor tunes.

Bert Lahr, Joan Davis, Dick Baldwin, the Peters Sisters, Chilton and Thomas, the Brewster Twins and Charles Judels, not to mention Ben Bernie's orchestra, are among the other who add life and gayety to this high-geared subject.

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, Feb. 4.

DAVID O. SELZNICK: Mr. and Mrs. Michael Kelly, parents of 12 year-old Tommy Kelly—your "Tom Sawyer"—were registered, by your representatives, at the Warwick Hotel. The Kellys had been on relief. When the interviewers arrived, they found the maid trying to get in and Mrs. Kelly announcing through the locked door: "Nobody ever can see my bedroom until I've made up the beds."

THOMAS E. DEWEY: Do you know that Robert Irwin, the man you're prosecuting for the Gedeon murders, wasn't discharged as "cured" from the Rockland State Hospital for the Insane? He was discharged only as "improved" . . . Henry Ford: Watch the NLRB cases against the Penn and Pacific Greyhound companies. If the board wins those cases, which are similar to yours, then you can't win . . . Mayor Hague: Dorothy Thompson finally crashed through in Jersey City. She made a speech about civil liberties there last night . . . Emily Post: Electra Waggoner, who has only 15 millions, is being signed by Agent Vic Orsatti for the movies.

• • • •

MOSS HART: Some Miami hotels are playing a song your father wrote down there. The song is called "It Gets You in Miami." He's having it copyrighted . . . John Murray: Allen Boretz, your co-author of "Room Service," now owns a fighter—206-pound Lee Stede . . . Mayor LaGuardia: "You're in for a number of conferences with Roger Baldwin, as a result of your recent statements regarding third-degree methods used by the police . . . Edna Ferber: Your niece, Janet Fox, went to Hollywood for a visit, but is expected to remain and appear in pictures.

CLIFFORD ODETS: Walter Wanger shelved "The River Is Blue," the screen play you wrote for him. But when your "Golden Boy" became a hit, Wanger realized that the screen play he owns is valuable. John Howard Lawson was hired to rewrite it, the picture is ready to be filmed and—although nothing of your material has been left—you'll be listed as the author . . . Cordell Hull: The next Fascist outburst in this part of the world is expected to take place in Chile . . . Nathan Straus: Alfred Rheinstein, chairman of the local Housing Authority here, didn't know about LaGuardia's Housing Plan until the mayor announced it.

ASCAP: Ralph Rainger, who wrote "Love in Bloom" and countless other hit tunes, decided that his songs would be improved if he studied serious compositions. He therefore began to work under famed Arnold Schoenberg, and, although Rainger began writing some very promising concertos and operas, he just couldn't write any more hit tunes . . . So he stopped stpdying, and since then has written, in quick succession, "Blossoms on Broadway," "Thanks for the Memory," "Ebb Tide" and "You Took the Words Right Out of My Heart."

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION: The "Vox Pop" program no longer will give $5 prizes to that person interviewed when the program's alarm rings. One Buffalo station complained, insisting there was no skill attached, and that therefore it was a lottery . . . Tommy Farr: James J. Braddock finally bought that restaurant yesterday. It's on Forty-ninth street. The restaurant has been known as Gottlieb's.

50 Years in Baseball

By Shirley Povich

Newly Formed Federal League 'Snatches' Walter Johnson With Larger Salary, $10,000 Bonus; But Baseball's 'Old Fox' Turns Tables.

Chapter Twenty-One.

CLARK GRIFFITH, THE OLD PLAYER PIRATE, whose ruthless raids on the National League had set up the American League in business back in 1901, was overtaken by retribution in the fall of 1914.

Walter Johnson, lured by the newly organized Federal League, "jumped" the Washington team.

Nothing more calamitous could have happened to Griffith's club. Washington lost, at once, its chief drawing-card and the best pitcher in the league. Without Johnson, the Senators, despite their third-place finish in 1914, were certain to be a lowly second-division club. Griffith's $27,000 investment in Washington stock was seriously imperiled. His dreams of maintaining the Senators as a potent factor in the pennant races had seemingly crashed. Without Johnson, in fact, Griffith could hardly operate.

But, scarcely had he heard the news of Johnson's desertion, than Griffith swung into action. At this business of snatching players, he was an old hand. It was his genius along those lines that had virtually given birth to the American League. He would re-take Johnson. He was ready to match his proselyting skill with the Federal League.

The "Feds" had come into baseball in 1913. Misguided promoters, who believed they could war against the National and American leagues and establish a third major league, had obtained oil-rich Harry Sinclair as their financial "angel." It was Sinclair whose money had established an eight-club league in competition with the American and National.

The "Feds" had used the same tactics to snatch players away from the two major leagues that Griffith, himself, had used back in the formative days of the American League. They dangled huge bonuses before the stars and lured a sprinkling of players away from the two big leagues—notably Hal Chase, of the Yankees, and Joe Tinker, of the Cubs.

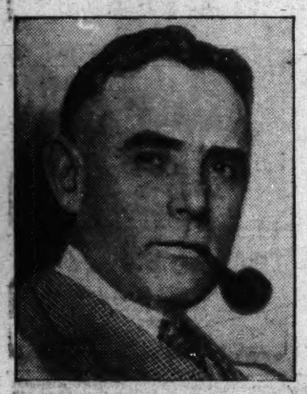
They were in a frenzy to obtain Johnson from the Senators.

Johnson's "jump" to the "Feds" was precipitated by President Ben Minor, of the Washington club, original Washington benefactor of Griffith and able administrator of the club's affairs. It was Minor who, in fact, had brought Johnson to the Senators, in 1907, after friends in the West had bombarded him with tales of the pitching prowess of a strapping young farm lad at Weiser, Idaho.

Johnson Accepts Federal League Offer.

GRIFFITH HAD WARNED MINOR that the "Feds" were angling for Johnson and that the Washington club would be forced to match their offer of a salary increase.

"Why, Johnson had a bad season this year," Minor protested. "He only won 23 games. That doesn't warrant more than the $12,500 we're paying him now. I'm going to write him a letter to that effect."



CLARK GRIFFITH at his desk at Nats' headquarters in 1913.

Griffith pleaded with Minor not to dispatch that type of a letter to Johnson, whom he knew would get a far more attractive offer from the "Feds." But Minor was insistent.

Johnson received Minor's letter refusing to raise his salary on a November morning at his Coffeyville, Kans., home. Noting its contents, the big pitcher was hopping mad.

By a coincidence, Joe Tinker, Federal League representative, called on Johnson, at Coffeyville, that afternoon. Tinker offered Johnson a $16,000 salary with Chicago in the Federal League and a $10,000 bonus for signing. Johnson, in his anger at the Washington club, signed.

And it was with no surprise that Griffith read the prideful announcement of the Federal League that Johnson had "jumped" to that circuit.

That the Washington club could be persuaded to match the Federal League's offer to Johnson, Griffith knew. But he was determined to regain his star pitcher. Quickly he formed his plans. To Fred Clarke, former Pittsburgh star and old friend of his National League days, Griffith dispatched a letter. Clarke lived at Independence, Kans., not far from Johnson's home. Griffith requested Clarke to secure him an interview with Johnson at the Coates House, Kansas City, on a date agreeable to Johnson. The appointment was made.

Griffith Persuades Johnson to Return, Needs $10,000.

FRIENDLY WITH GRIFFITH, but still ired at the Washington club, Johnson refused to reconsider his move. Mrs. Johnson, disheartened by the prospect of moving from Washington, wept. All the oratory at his command Griffith used in an attempt to persuade Johnson to rejoin Washington. Finally, he declared:

"We'll give you the same $16,000 salary the "Feds" are giving you. And you can keep that $10,000 bonus. We'll repay it to the Federal League."

And Johnson agreed.

But Griffith had exceeded his authority. The $16,000 salary for Johnson he believed he might be able to persuade the Washington stockholders to pay. But the $10,000 bonus—they would never agree to that, he knew. Where would the $10,000 come from?

Griffith thought he knew.

Telephoning the American League headquarters at Chicago, Griffith inquired for League President Ban Johnson. Johnson, he learned, was taking the baths at West Baden, Ind., in company with Charles Comiskey, wealthy owner of the Chicago White Sox.

"I need $10,000 to re-take Walter Johnson from the Federal League," Griffith phoned Johnson.

"What do you want me to do about it?" asked Johnson.

"I want you to give it to me from the league funds," said Griffith.

"It can't be done," declared Johnson.

Whereupon, Griffith pointed out that the American League boasted a $450,000 reserve fund which had always been used for such emergencies. "You always called it our 'fighting fund' and we've got a fight on our hands with the Federal League," Griffith said hotly. "In the old days, that's how we saved our league," he reminded President Johnson.

Ban Johnson Refuses Aid; Comiskey Comes Through.

BUT JOHNSON WAS ADAMANT. The Washington club would have to fight its own battles, he declared. The league wouldn't help.

"All right, then, get Comiskey to the phone," shouted Griffith, his anger mounting at the rebuff from the league president.

Presently Griffith heard the voice of Comiskey saying, "Hello, what do you want?"

"I want $10,000," said Griffith.

"For what?"

"To pry Walter Johnson away from the Federal League."

"That's your problem, not mine," said Comiskey, laughing.

"Oh no, it isn't," replied Griffith, "it's your problem, too."

"How do you figure that?"

"Well, you just bought Eddie Collins from the Athletics for $75,000, didn't you, Commy?"

"Yes."

"And the Federal League is giving you some competition over there on the North Side, isn't it, Commy?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, how would you like to see Walter Johnson playing for the Chicago Feds next season and drawing all those fans away from the White Sox Park?"

Holy smokes!" ejaculated Comiskey, "how much did you say Johnson wants to stay in the American League?"

"$10,000 will turn the trick."

"You'll have my check in the morning, Griff."

Thus did Clark Griffith, returning to his old game of player-snatching, outwit the "Feds" and save Walter Johnson for the American League at no expense whatever to the Washington ball club, except a $3,500 raise in salary.

Many have been the advanced reasons for the famous Ban Johnson-Charley Comiskey feud that developed between the pair in later years; if you want Clark Griffith's guess, it dated from that telephone conversation at West Baden, Ind., that November day in 1914.

TOMORROW: Still building a team for the future, Griffith acquires two players who were destined to gain fame with the Nats . . . Joe Judge and Sam Rice.

Loyola of Chicago Wins Thriller; Morden Ties With 5 Seconds to Go; Colonials Lose in Last 7 Seconds of Action.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chicago, Ill., Feb. 4.—George Washington University's basketball team lost to Loyola, of Chicago, tonight, 47 to 45, in a three overtime period game. Wib Kautz, Loyola guard, sank the winning basket with only seven seconds to go in the third extra period.

That shot was the climax to an evening of competition that started at an irritatingly slow pace and that ended in an hysterical frenzy. Cause of all the strain upon the 3,000 fans was Elmore Borden, George Washington substitute, who sank a basket from the side of the floor with only 5 seconds to play in the regular game. This tied the score at 37 to 37. From there on the activity was fast, proceeding in this fashion: First extra period: Kautz sank two long shots which were matched by Butterworth and Auerback, of George Washington.

Second extra period: Novak scored on a "tip-in" shot, and Butterworth countered with a shot from the free-throw area.

Third extra period: Kautz scored on a hook shot; Silkowitz stole the ball from Hogan, of Loyola, and scored with a one-handed effort; Silkowitz fouled Kautz, who missed the free throw; Kautz sank the winning basket with 7 seconds to play.

George Washington was unquestionably weakened by the loss of its captain, Tom O'Brien, who suffered an injured ankle in the game against Wayne University Thursday night. Had O'Brien been able to perform, Novak might not have been able to score 19 points and Kautz 17. They were the chief factors in the Loyola victory.

Jack Butterworth, was the George Washington star, if a star must be selected. He made 16 points and was very proficient on the defense.

Loyola was doubly jubilant over tonight's victory, for George Washington's impressive record makes it a valuable one. And it continued a jinx established last year, when the Chicagoans snapped a 26 game winning streak for George Washington in a game at Washington, D. C.

The first half was an uninteresting one, ending with George Washington leading, 19 to 13. The rest period seemed particularly beneficial to Loyola, for, led by Novak, Kautz, and O'Brien, it closed the gap and tied the score halfway in the second half at 25 to 25. From there on, the action was furious, the two teams swinging into their spectacular extra period battle after Borden shot and hit the target just before the final gun went off.

Santa Anita Race Won by Playmay At $673.40 Price

Los Angeles, Calif., Feb. 4 (AP).—The biggest payoff in the last four years of horse racing in this country was returned today when F. Turner, jr.'s Playmay won the first race at Santa Anita at odds of $673.40 to $2.

Previous to Playmay's triumph, her third in 16 starts, the high for the period was $571 for $1 returned by Escohigh after winning at Tropical Park the latter part of December, 1937. Playmay paid $141.60 to place and $104.60 to show.

Riders Bow To Eastern; Tech Victor

Roosevelt Beaten, 45-35; Central Loses Series Game, 27-22.

By Jack Munhall.

At the expense of Roosevelt, the same team that caused it to lose an undisputed lead last week, Eastern's smooth basketball team last night vaulted back into sole possession of the interhigh lead by trimming the Rough Riders, 45-35, before 750 spectators in Tech gym. In the second game of the doubleheader Tech dealt Central its sixth straight loss, 27-22.

Roosevelt, through its defeat, slipped from a tie with Eastern and Western and dropped to third place. Western, though idle, nudged into the runner-up spot, where it probably will remain until Eastern is met February 22. Tech held to its fourth place, while Central is still in the cellar.

Eastern's revenge was not gained without a rousing struggle, for the rejuvenated Riders, with Newcomers Hymie Perlo and Jack Smith proving helpful, were a much better Roosevelt team than in any other series effort.

Robertson Top Scorer.

Robertson by registering 15 points gave the best one-man scoring exhibition of the series. Quantrille, with 13 points, and Lombardy, with 11, including five foul shots in six chances, were best for Eastern although Lusby played his usual dependable defensive game and also made 9 points.

The Tech-Central contest was not as close as the score indicates. The McKinley lads hopped to an early lead and were 8 to 10 points ahead until the last quarter when Central rallied to make the result doubtful. Tech was in the van 13-4 at half, holding Central to but one basket in each of the first two periods, and led 22-11 at the end of the third stanza.

Bethesda Quintet Wallops Gonzaga

Exhibiting a smart passing game and accurate scoring attack, Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School ran roughshod over Gonzaga yesterday, scoring a 32-19 victory on its home court. The result avenged a previous defeat Bethesda suffered on Gonzaga's floor earlier in the season.

The suburbanites led all the way, pulling up at the end of the first half with a 14-7 lead. Morell and Fuller led the attack, while the floor work of Kimmel and L. Vannais was outstanding.

Apostoli Beats Lee In Blistering Bout

'Uncrowned King' of Middleweights Has His Hands Full With Tough Nebraskan; 10,877 Customers See Great Fight; Battle Is Furious.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—Fred Apostoli, "uncrowned king" of the middleweights, was forced to his limit tonight to win the decision over Glen Lee, Nebraskan, in a 12-round blood and thunder battle that had a large Madison Square Garden crowd in an uproar from start to finish. Apostoli weighed 158¾; Lee, 154½.

Lee, rated a 4-to-1 shot or more against the ex-San Francisco bellhop who stopped Champion Freddie Steele last month, gave more than was bargained, and he all but came up from the floor in the first round to make a stand that won the shouting throng of 10,877 paid spectators. Twice he had Apostoli reeling but the stronger Californian came through in the clutch, clinching the decision in the final two rounds.

The Associated Press score sheet gave six rounds to Apostoli, three to Lee and three even. There were no knockdowns, strangely enough, both fighters standing up under of the most terrific bombardment of gloves ever witnessed at the Garden.

Lee's Nose Crushed.

After the first two minutes, curtains started to fall for the blond Nebraskan. Off to a fast start, he ran into a straight left and a right that had him groggy and reeling. But pound him as he might, Apostoli couldn't finish him, though Lee's nose gushed blood.

Instead of stumbling out for the second, as everyone expected, Lee came out like a wildcat. He took the aggressiveness away from Apostoli and shook him with right hooks. One hard right caught Apostoli in the stomach and slowed him to a walk for the duration of the round. And in the third, Lee, boring in to escape rapier lefts, batted Fred about the ring, and the crowd knew a real scrap was on.

Apostoli came back to win the next three rounds, starting slowly in each, but rallying in the closing minute to punish Lee unmercifully.

In the seventh, however, Lee all but doubled up the bull-necked Californian with two punches to the stomach.

Fred Wins Next Three.

Fiercest of all rounds was the eighth. Both stood toe to toe and slugged with first one and then the other sagging. That was Lee's final bid. He hit Apostoli with everything he had and laid a red patch a foot wide under his left arm, but still the Coast battler drove in. In the eleventh and twelfth, as Lee faded stubbornly but surely, Apostoli, using his superior reach to great advantage, removed whatever doubt there was as to the outcome.

Apostoli seldom missed a punch in the closing two rounds as Lee, the steam out of his sails, missed.

Bob Mathias Wins Bout in 147-Lb. Class

Mayo, Schwartz, Wright Victors; Teams in 4-4 Deadlock at End.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Washington's Golden Gloves boxing team, a 22-karat squadron of pillow-pushers, fought eight blistering bouts to a 4-4 stalemate with Massachusetts' amateur ring champions last night at Catholic University.

A disappointingly small audience of 2,000 fans saw the match, which was staged for the benefit of the President's birthday ball fund for the fight on paralysis. Proceeds, after deducting expenses, were to be turned over to the fund.

Nor was the show up to expected standards, although it had its moments. The evening's two star bouts were not manufactured by boys publicized as the best, but emanated from a couple of wholly unexpected sources.

Titanic Frank Chludenski, Massachusetts heavyweight, gained a tie for his mates by flattening Andy Keady with a ponderous left to the jaw after 35 seconds of the first round. Keady came out with an unexpected rush, rammed a straight right to his opponent's mouth that drew the claret and was promptly belted out by the irritated Pole.

Buster Miller, Washington's feather-erweight entry, was supposed to give the patrons a little fun for their money in his bout with George Salamone, but Buster wasn't in proper condition and wound up on the wrong end of the score. That was the first disappointment of the evening. Salamone handled the Boy's Club battler too easily to suit the fans, winning a unanimous verdict.

Bob Mathias, all-American 147-pound titleholder, whipped Eugene, Robi Chaud, of Worcester, in another star bout, but failed to land the knockout punch his followers pleaded for. Robichaud plainly was in there to go the distance and he did, thanks to clinching, holding and wrestling tactics. Mathias stung him with two sharp rights to the head in the first, and buckled his knees with another in the third, but Robichaud held on like an old sweetheart and managed to last the route.

The 112-pound duel, involving Willie Tapp, of Washington and Charley Morris, and the 135-pound engagement between Carroll Wright, another District lad, and Tommy Colton, stole the show. They produced three rounds of fast, clever fighting and had the fans in an uproar throughout.

Morris won the nod over Tapp, but Wright evened the count by winning over Colton, after stretching him on the carpet for three counts of nine.

Tapp won his bout on The Post score sheet, despite a terrific Morris rally in the third round that all but put the local lad in the land of nod. He pecked away at Morris' head with his long left jab in the first two rounds, crossing from time to time with a punishing right hand to win the sessions easily. Morris, however, was extremely fresh in the third, and rocked Tapp with an unrelenting barrage of leather to the head and body that had him hanging on.

Colton Down Twice.

Wright had Colton down twice in the first round with looping lefts to the head, and how the New Englander mustered enough strength to regain his feet is somewhat of a mystery. But he came out fighting for the second, rocking Wright with both hands to the body that took a lot of confidence out of him. It was that way in the third until he left his jaw unprotected and almost had it blown off by another left. But he was on his feet at the finish, a loser, but a good one.

Gilbert Mayo, of Alexandria, won the 118-pound bout from Dick Volpe, flooring him with a straight right to the mouth for a nine-count. Volpe was no match for his rival after that and Mayo coasted home.

Schwartz Gets Kayo.

Bobby Schwartz's knockout over Joe Mahoney in the light heavyweight division, assured the host team of at least a draw and provided one of the card's best scraps. Mahoney was a game youngster, but the Alexandria baker boy carried too much power for him. A left hook to the head had Mahoney down for no count in the first, and he hit the deck again in the second from a right to the head, before going out for keeps after 45 seconds of the final session.

Massachusetts, trailing at the end of the 147-pound fight, caught up with its rival at 3-3 when Lew Smith outpointed Southpaw Jack White in a fairly good fight. White was too small, his reach too short, to cope with the taller lad's style.

Mary Ryan Leads Capital Entries in Badminton Play

Champions from six States and cities were led into the third round of play of the District's first annual open badminton championship by Billy Markham, seeded No. 1, from New York, last night at the Kensington, Md., Armory.

Markham, possessor of no championship but holder of several victories over America's outstanding performers, experienced little trouble in disposing of Gould Morrison, of Baltimore, 15—2, 15—3. He defeated Louis Gordin, of the District, in the first round, 15—1, 15—1.

Other favorites advanced with Markham as not a single upset was recorded among the ranks of the eight seeded entrants.

Fourteen players reached the second round and two more were to join them as a result of matches scheduled today.

Mary Ryan, District entry, paced the field in the women's singles play as she and Elinore Abbott, Baltimore, reached the third round of play. Miss Ryan defeated Rosalie Wissel, Baltimore, 11—7, 11—4, and Miss Abbott defeated Natalie Davies, Baltimore, 11—0, 11—0.

Play is scheduled to continue at 10 a. m. this morning, with women's singles and doubles set. Men's play is listed for the afternoon, with semifinals set for tomorrow morning in all classes. Finals are to be held tomorrow afternoon.

Wise Prince Downs Rollin Home by Head in Sensational Hialeah Race

This Morning

WITH SHIRLEY POVICH

"I want to prove to the American public that I can really fight a little," says Tommy Farr in explaining his about-face after refusfusing, at first, to accept a bout with Max Baer.

However, we imagine that by this time the American public is willing to take Tommy's word for it that he can fight a little—not much, just a little. In 15 rounds against Joe Louis and ten against Jim Braddock, Farr proved just that. The heavyweight title appears safe on American shores if the best foreign challenger is Farr.

POVICH.

Says Farr: "I was handicapped by a gashed cheek when I fought Joe Louis and I had a bad left hand when I fought Braddock. I'm not making alibis.(Hear. Hear!) Watch me against Baer!" Inasmuch as Tommy is fighting for 27½ per cent of the gate, he is earnest about inviting the folks to watch him against Baer, but there is a tendency at this writing to regard with great indifference the fight scheduled at the Garden on March 11.

It isn't an exciting program that Promoter Mike Jacobs has mapped for the summer months. The Louis-Schmeling affair looms as an attractive promotion both financially or competitively, but after that, what? Jacobs' announcement that the Farr-Baer winner will meet the Louis-Schmeling winner is not calculated to excite the imagination of the paying public.

If the second title bout of the summer pits Louis against Farr the fans can be expected to stay away in droves. Louis, fighting perhaps the worst fight since he became an important figure in the heavyweight scene, disposed of Farr last summer and that battle left no appetite for a repetition of it.

And if it comes to the point where Max Baer by some chance qualifies as an opponent for Joe Louis, that bout will be even less attractive. Still vivid with the customers is the memory of a thoroughly-scared Baer taking the count on one knee after being battered helpless in three rounds. Baer will be two years older this summer and courage is not necessarily developed with age.

If it is Schmeling who is pitted against Farr in the second of Jacobs' promotions, then the Welshman would have even less chance of coming into the title. Against Louis, Farr was in there with a chap who could be befuddled by a boxer's varied styles, but Schmeling is a very understanding fellow and a sharpshooter in addition and Farr, against him, would be in for a very messy evening.

The other remaining possibility is, of course, a Schmeling-Baer match. And, on the records, that would appear to be a natural. The chief blot on Schmeling's record is that knockout at the hands of Baer several years ago. The ringsiders that night will never understand the denouement of that bout. Schmeling, who was outboxing Baer and cutting him badly, permitted himself to get hit with a roundhouse right that you could have ducked, and went down for the full count.

But Baer, that evening was a so-called "hungry" fighter. He was on his way up, and ambition surged through him. He still owned that ambition on the night he won the title from Primo Carnera after knocking him down 11 times, but his decline set in immediately. He was a lazy, lethargic defending champion against Braddock, he was thoroughly frightened against Louis and he permitted himself to be outpointed by Farr.

When Louis and Schmeling crawl through the ropes on an evening next June for their title battle, the betting odds figure to be the closest in heavyweight history. For the second time in boxing history (the Braddock-Louis match was the first) a heavyweight champion may go into the ring as the underdog in the betting.

The methodical manner in which Schmeling outboxed Louis in 1936 and numbed him with crushing right crosses to the chin to ripen him for a knockout, has won the German a host of followers. Jack Doyle, Broadway's No. 1 betting commissioner, predicted recently that when the two meet again Schmeling would be the favorite at 7-to-5 odds.

The suspicion still lurks that Louis has a combustible chin and that the fighter who doesn't fear him can whip him. We doubt that. Jimmy Braddock put him on the floor with an uppercut in the first round and showed no fear at any time, but Louis caught up with Braddock and they had to stop it.

Sometime during their 15-round engagement next June, Louis will also catch up with Schmeling, we are thinking. Prize ring tradition will be solidly against the German. That they never come back is axiomatic in heavyweight title fights and, at 34, Schmeling will be giving Louis a ten-year pull in the weights. That appears to be too much.

Race Proves Two-Horse Mile Thriller

Arcaro's Riding Decides in Battle of Twin 6-to-5 Choices.

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 4. They found a way to beat Mrs. G. H. Emick's Rollin Home, the ex-$1,500 plater that became the sprint sensation of the Florida season, here this afternoon. The 5-year-old gelding endeavored to stretch his brilliant speed to 1 mile, as well as having to contend with the powerful riding of Eddie Arcaro astride, Felix Spatola's Wise Prince, and the combination proved just a trifle too much for the High Time star, for Wise Prince won by a head. This occurred in the featured Pensacola Purse.

The time for the eight furlongs was 1:37 4-5, slower than had been anticipated with such speed marvels engaged.

This was one of the most colorful and interesting events of the season. Rollin Home entered the race with four victories in five Florida starts behind him, including two recent handicap scores. Wise Prince had clicked three times in five outings, his last triumph having been recorded last Saturday in the Miami Beach Handicap. Arguments pro and con as to the respective merits of the two horses raged before the running.

Little Sammy Williams broke Rollin Home on top in a perfect start, while the veteran Arcaro, leading jockey of the year, had the ultimate winner closest on the trail. If Williams had any idea of keeping Rollin Home under some restraint, he found it a difficult task, for the Emick sprinter opened up four lengths advantage in short order. Arcaro, with nothing behind him to fear, could not make up an inch on the pacemaker as they rounded the turn.

Then, in the stretch, Eddie worked furiously, plying the whip and using all his knowledge to make Wise Prince gain. The Prince loomed as a real threat after straightening out. He drew up alongside Rollin Home at the eighth pole. The latter held on gamely, but Williams could not cope with the husky Arcaro in the closing drive.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OUR MAT (entry), $4.80, $2.40, $2.20; CHERRY JAM, $7.40, $4.20; SWIFTNESS, $4.70.

OUR MAT, crowded back at the start, was taken to the inside in the run out of the chute, moved into the lead approaching the furlong pole, but then faltered and just lasted. CHERRY JAM broke toward the outside, was quickly straightened out, but then again bolted toward the outside and caused considerable interference, came on through the stretch and would have won in a few more strides. SWIFTNESS, away forwardly, raced clear of trouble on the outside, but could not reach the leaders.

SECOND RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:32. Off 2:36½. Winner, J. Dunn's b. g. (6), by Polydor—Elastique II. Trained by T. J. Tault, jr. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:47 1-5, 1:11 4-5, 1:24 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GOLD BUCKLE, $8.20, $4.60, $3.80; JUDGE LEER, $11.20, $6.30; NOTICE ME, $5.30.

GOLD BUCKLE, going prominently on the outside from the start, responded courageously when called upon for the final effort and wore JUDGE LEER down in the closing strides. JUDGE LEER, quickest to begin, displayed the most speed while saving ground, but faltered when put to a drive. NOTICE ME, away slowly, swung to the outside after leaving the backstretch, gradually improved his position and wore VELOCITER down in the last stride.

Daily Double, Our Mat and Gold Buckle, Paid $16.40.

THIRD RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:02. Off 3:06. Winner, S. A. Cooper, jr.'s, br. g. (4), by Insco—Stage Maid. Trained by J. P. Mayberry. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:22 3-5, 0:47 1-5, 1:12, 1:23 4-5.

TEDDY BEAU	(Cooper)	114	7	10	10	10	10	10	10	29.70

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HALLE, $35.00, $14.90, $7.40; DEBATE, $12.70, $6.00; FERRYBOAT, $4.30.

HALLE, away well, went forwardly until leaving the backstretch, assumed command under light urging and held away the remainder of the trip, winning with speed in reserve. DEBATE, under slight restraint and saving much ground the entire trip, finished willingly, but could not better his position. FERRYBOAT, under a vigorous drive in the final half mile, had no excuses.

FOURTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:31. Off 3:32. Winner, C. E. Hamilton's b. g. (3), by Last Reveille—Witchbroom. Trained by J. Forrest. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:48 1-5, 1:14, 1:41.

SOU FENG	(Huff)	102½	3	3	4h	10	10	10	10	145.85

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLOX, $5.80, $4.40, $3.30; WOODWAAC, $16.00, $9.40; MAMA'S BOY, $3.90.

BLOX went in near pursuit of the leader from the start, responded with determination under stout pressure through the stretch and got up in the final strides. WOODWAAC outbroke the field, was rated in front while saving ground, held on stoutly when challenged, but faltered in the last stride. MAMA'S BOY, prominent and under restraint in the early running, was unable to improve his position when called upon, but held DIDUTELLUS safe at the finish.

FIFTH RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:01. Off 4:03. Winner, C. S. Bromley's b. c. (3), by Spanish Play—Bunt. Trained by J. J. Bauer. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:47, 1:12 3-5, 1:26.

CUCKOO	(Wright)	113	5	1	5½	6h	7	7	7	36.50

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OUR KETCHAM, $33.50, $13.30, $5.40; GAYSET, $10.00, $4.50; MEMOIRS, $3.00.

OUR KETCHAM, running in his best form, went prominently on the outside under slight restraint in the early stages, took command when called upon and continued gamely when the real issue came and outlasted GAYSET. The latter broke well, but was compelled to pull up suddenly in the opening sixteenth mile, gradually improved his position on the outside in the final half mile, finished strongest of all and ran as if the best, MEMOIRS, pinched back in the opening furlong, moved into contention swiftly in the run down the backstretch, closed gamely through the stretch, but could not keep pace with the leaders.

SIXTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,200; allowances. For 4-year-olds and upward. The Pensacola Purse. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:31. Off 4:32. Winner, Felix Spatola's blk. h. (6), by Wise Counsellor—Grace Troxler. Trained by H. Jacobs. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:48 3-5, 1:11 1-5, 1:37 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WISE PRINCE, $4.40, $2.40, $2.30; ROLLIN' HOME, $2.60, $2.20; BULWARK, $2.70.

WISE PRINCE, going in closest pursuit of the leader under slight restraint in the early running, moved up stoutly on the inside entering the stretch but was blocked, came around the leader in the final three-sixteenths, responded courageously to punishment and got up in the closing strides. ROLLIN' HOME began fast, set a rapid pace under steadying restraint while saving ground, made a game effort when the final test came, but Arcaro outrode Williams when it came to a drive. BULWARK, under pressure from the start, continued gamely to hold BUCK LANGHORNE safe through the stretch.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 5:01. Off 5:09½. Winner, River Divide Farm's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SPANISH MAID, $7.80, $5.10, $3.80; MY WO, $6.80, $5.50; BAIL OUT, $10.20.

SPANISH MAID, going close to the pace all the way, stole through on the inside entering the stretch, disposed of MY WO at the furlong pole and drew out in the stretch run. MY WO, quickest away, showed the most speed while being rated in front, but bore out when entering the stretch and faltered in the last furlong. BAIL OUT, a forward contender entering the stretch and faltered in the last furlong. BAIL OUT, a forward contender all the way, maintained her position with good courage in the stretch drive.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 5:36. Off 5:39. Winner, E. R. Morris' b. g. (3), by Axenstein—Kolinsky. Trained by K. Ramsey. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:13, 1:39 2-5, 1:53.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BRANDON PRINCE, $4.30, $3.40, $2.70; CARL B., $7.10, $4.40; NARISE, $7.30.

BRANDON PRINCE, going in closest pursuit of the leader from the start, improved his position steadily when placed to pressure, and took command through the stretch to win mildly urged. CARL B., strongly urged and prominent all the way, finished willingly, but never seriously threatened the winner. NARISE opened up a big lead with a rush in the opening half mile, but faltered in the stretch run.

Stars Will Vie Tonight In Millrose A.A. Games

300 Track and Field Athletes From 22 States Will Compete in Madison Square Garden; Glenn Cunningham Tops Runners.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—Track and field stars, headed by a brilliant array of record holders, Olympic, National A. A. U. and college champions, take over Madison Square Garden tomorrow night for the thirty-first Millrose A. A. games.

Not in several years has such a galaxy been assembled for the first major meet of the metropolitan indoor season. Approximately 300 athletes from 22 States and the District of Columbia are entered in the 22 events, including 11 relays.

The classic Wanamaker mile will bring together rivals of long-standing, headed by Glenn Cunningham, world indoor record-holder and winner of the event four of the last five years. Arrayed against him will be Archie Sam Romani, Emporia (Kans.) Teachers graduate; Indiana's "Iron Man," Don Lash; Gene Venzke, New York Athletic Club veteran, and Charles Fenske, of Wisconsin.

Seeks to Repeat.

Cunningham is one of the many 1937 winners out to repeat. The others are Jim Herbert, New York University sophomore, who can win the Millrose "600" Trophy outright by duplicating last year's victory; Perrin Walker, lanky Georgia-trained New York A. C. sprinter, in the 60-yard dash; Sam Allen, of Bristow, Okla., in the 60-yard hurdles; Tommy Deckard, of Indiana, in the 2-mile run, and Ed Burke, of Marquette, in the high jump.

Seventy-five minutes after the mile, Lash will seek to dethrone Deckard in the 2-mile test, with Joe McCluskey, New York A. C. veteran, another contender.

Walker, national 100-meter champion, will be tested by Ben Johnson, Columbia captain, who holds national and collegiate titles; Allan Tolmich, of Wayne University; Marty Glickman, Syracuse Olympian, and Eulace Peacock, former Temple ace.

Tolmich, National A. A. U. outdoor champion, also will face Allen, Forrest (Spec) Towns, of Georgia, Olympic titleholder, and Jack Donovan, of Dartmouth, I. C. 4-A champion, in the high hurdles.

In the 600 Herbert will oppose a small but high-class field of Charley Beetham, former national half-mile champion; Howard Borck, of Manhattan, and Indiana's Sam Miller.

Woodruff to Run.

"John John" Woodruff, Pitts' great half-miler, will toe the line in his specialty with Lou Burns, of Manhattan; Alex Northrop, of Harvard; Stanley Holt, of Rhode Island State; Eddie Brown, of the New York A. C., and Beetham.

Burke's high jump rivals include Mel Walker and Dave Albritton, of Ohio State; Cornelius Johnson, Olympic titleholder now staging a comeback; Art Byrnes, of Manhattan, and Les Steers, brilliant high school star from the San Francisco Olympic Club. Walker touched the 6-foot 10-inch mark twice last year.

Manhattan, Boston College, Fordham, Princeton, Colgate, Williams and New Hampshire are the teams which will seek to repeat last year's victories in the mile college relays. Twenty-seven colleges are entered in the seven 1-mile races and seven others in the 2-mile test.

In the medley relay, North Texas Teachers, with two sets of twins, Elmer and Delmer Brown and Wayne and Blaine Rideout, will race Manhattan, Indiana and Ohio State.

Hoyas and Terps To Have Runners In Millrose Games

Mile relay teams of two local schools will compete in the Millrose games at Madison Square Garden tonight.

Both Maryland and Georgetown University will be represented by four-man entries in the famous New York games that will bring together the best track and field athletes in the East.

Maryland will run against Amherst, Williams and Middlebury and stands good chance of winning, as its runners have been turning in fast times for the quarter mile.

Georgetown will draw Rhode Island State, University of Pennsylvania and Williams as opponents.

The Terps will be represented by Bill Thies or Allan Miller, Jim Kehoe, Mason Chronister and Frank Cronin.

John Motzenbacker, Vincent Healey, Stuart Reeves and Vincent Breun will run for the Hoyas.

Whirlwinds Play Pros Tomorrow

New York Whirlwinds and Heurich Brewers, who clash in the feature professional basketball game tomorrow afternoon at the Heurich gymnasium, Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest, will have two supporting contests.

Manager Bob McDonald yesterday arranged for the Marine Reserves to meet Fort Myer at 2 o'clock and the Regal Clothiers and Senate fives, two of the better-known local amateur clubs, to clash at 4 o'clock.

The Heurich-Whirlwind game will start at 3 o'clock.

Heurich has won six out of its last eight games. Last season the Brewers won from the Whirlwinds, who tomorrow will pin their hopes on such stalwarts as Leo Merson, formerly of Long Island University; Red Conaty, once with the old Palace five, of Washington; Milt McDermott, Willie McDonald, Dick Lee and Stan Entrup.

Patty Berg Wins Miami Title, 4 and 3

Beats Mrs. Jameson in Finals; Takes Crown for Third Year.

Coral Gables, Fla., Feb. 4.—Patty Berg, the freckled Minneapolis redhead, continued merrily on her sweeping conquest of the winter golfing circuit today by defeating Mrs. Jane Cothran Jameson, of West Palm Beach, Fla., 4 and 3, in the 36 hole final of the Miami Biltmore tournament.

It was the third consecutive time she had won the Biltmore and her third straight tournament victory this winter. She recently won at Punta Gorda, Fla., after capturing a medal-play event at Augusta, Ga.

Applying the pressure when it was needed, Miss Berg came from behind four times during the morning round, took command of the match with a three-under-par 37 on the afternoon outgoing nine, and played steady golf the rest of the day.

She won the final three holes when Mrs. Jameson ran into trouble.

Through the first 14 holes Mrs. Jameson had a two-hole lead. In fact, she hadn't trailed since the match began.

Patty squared the match by chipping dead to the sixteenth pin, forged ahead on the seventeenth as Mrs. Jameson missed a three-foot putt, and went to lunch with a one-hole lead.

Jane recovered her poise as the afternoon round began but Patty, chipping and putting with almost uncanny accuracy, poured eight consecutive fours at her—starting with the second hole—and was two up beginning the last lap.

Mrs. Jameson stayed in the running with a 20-foot putt on the tenth green but she lost the eleventh as Patty holed a nine-footer. Miss Berg drove into the water on the short twelfth and Mrs. Jameson won that hole. It was her final gesture.

Hoyas Play Panthers; Terps Offer 2 Cards

Old Liners Meet Washington and Lee Cagers and Virginia Boxers at College Park Tonight; Georgetown Five in Action.

By Bob Garrison.

Local athletic fans will have to find a three-sided coin if they plan to entrust the flip of one with their Saturday night sports selection for there are that many college attractions scheduled tonight.

They'll probably flip a regular two-sided nickel—heads it's Tech High and tails it's Maryland University. If it stands on edge, it's American U.

For at Tech the road-weary Georgetown University basketball team returns to town to play Penn State at the Eckington gym in a return Eastern Inter-Collegiate Conference battle the outcome of which may have a great bearing on the league standing. They play at 8:30 p. m.

Maryland offers a double-header, basketball and boxing. The Terps do battle with a Southern Conference cage foe, Washington and Lee, in the opener, and then clash with the University of Virginia boxers in the finale. Starting time is 8 p. m.

Out at the Massachusetts avenue school, where they are saying the cage team is the greatest in American University's recent history, the Eagles will meet Randolph-Macon's Yellow Jackets at 8:30 p. m.

Georgetown will be opening a seven-game conference streak that threatens to make or break the Hoyas. Should they reverse the licking handed them by the Lions, two weeks ago, the Hilltoppers would be right back in the thick of the conference title race.

When the two teams clashed before, they were deadlocked for the league lead, and since then Penn State has played but once in conference competition, beating Temple last night.

Maryland will be seeking victories in both basketball and boxing over teams regarded as the best in Virginia. Washington and Lee's Generals, led by 6 foot 7 inch Bob Spessard, center, who has scored nearly 1,000 points in college competition, are considered among the best in the South.

Maryland, minus its sharpshooting center, Charlie (Chuck) Norton, will rely on a fast breaking, long range passing attack and a zone defense to register its second victory of the week, having defeated V. P. I. Monday and lost to Navy and N. Y. U. Wednesday and Thursday, respectively.

Duke Boxers Hosts To Catholic U.

Durham, N. C., Feb. 4.—Headlined by the welterweight scrap between Capt. Danny Farrar, of the Blue Devils, and Capt. Fred Mix, of the Cardinals, boxing teams of Duke and Catholic University, will fight it out in Duke gym tomorrow night.

The Farrar-Mix set-to promises to be the greatest individual bout ever staged in this section. Mix enters the engagement with Duke's former national intercollegiate champ with a record of 15 victories in 20 collegiate clashes. In his three years at Duke, Farrar has lost only three fights, one due to an eye cut and the other two by close decisions.

Jimmy Little, regular featherweight last season, returned to the team this week and will make his 1938 bow by going against Tex Guinan, of the Cardinals.

Cadets Win, 37-27; Gain Prep Crown

Giebel Stars in Defeat of G. U. Prep Five at Garrett Park.

By Jack Munhall.

St. John's crack team, rushing toward a city championship, paused yesterday to pick up the Catholic Prep League title by conquering Georgetown Prep's stubborn representatives, 37-27, on the Garrett Park floor. Although the Johnnies have another league encounter scheduled with Gonzaga, their victory over the Preps clinched the crown. They have won three straight contests while Gonzaga and Georgetown have won one and dropped a pair.

For one quarter it appeared that the improving Prepmen were going to spoil St. John's perfect scholastic record in an upset such as they pulled on Gonzaga earlier in the week. Guarding the Cadets closely and aided by the low-hanging rafters which blocked several St. John's long shot attempts, the Little Hoyas were leading 11-5 in the opening minutes of the second period. But the visitors called time out and apparently solved the Prep defense for Jim Giebel imediately rammed in a field goal starting a barrage which netted 14 points.

Coach Gene Augusterfer yanked his regulars and inserted the second five to play the fourth quarter. Georgetown seized upon the weaker opposition and rolled up three quick baskets and a free throw to cut the margin to 29-21.

Giebel again led the St. John's attack with six field goals and four free throws for 16 points. Swagart accounted for 10 points, and Francis Battiste 7 more. John (Fuzzy) Fahrendorf was outstanding for Georgetown with 7 markers.

Bisons Beat Virginia Five

Coming from behind in the second half, after trailing at intermission by a 20-18 count, Howard University's Bisons chalked up a 47-28 victory over Virginia State yesterday. The win enabled Howard to take undisputed possession of the lead in the C. I. A. A. Conference race with 7 victories against 1 defeat.

Herbie Jones, switched from forward to guard, paced the winners with nine field goals for the day. Howard displayed a better brand of defensive as well as offensive work in the final half, limiting the Old Dominion quintet to three field goals.

Jaramillo Will Fight Camarata Here Monday; Straiges Is Hurt

A cut eye, sustained in training, yesterday forced Joey Straiges to beg out of his match with Nicky Camarata scheduled Monday night at the arena.

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn immediately signed Cristobal Jaramillo, clever little Puerto Rican, as a substitute for Straiges, and is satisfied that that new match will be as good, if not better than the old one.

"Jaramillo," panted Goldie, "Beat Ray Ingram here, and he beat a lot of others. Well, he fought Lou Gevinson, and gave him a tough fight, and he beat Ray Ingram. Dot's right, I mentioned it. Well; just say he's th' best of 'em and it'll be a good fight."

Whether Goldie says so or not, it should be a good argument inasmuch as Jaramillo displayed top-ranking form in his bout with Gevinson, who seems to be the whetstone upon which all out-of-town fighters his weight and size are tested. Cristobal showed the local lad more right hands in the eight rounds they were together than President Roosevelt has seen during his term in the White House.

The swarthy islander paddled furiously—backwards—in going the distance against Gevinson, but so close was the decision that a near-capacity audience booed it roundly for several minutes. He is the same type of fighter as Straiges—a good boxer and clever ring general—and will be a good test for Camarata, who happens to be a slugger. Both principals have been doing well around New York lately, and Camarata, as a matter of fact, has taken the town by storm in his last two appearances.

Ahearn also announced that El Brookman and Sammy Bacala, of Baltimore, have been signed for a third and last four-round preliminary to round out the card.

Other bouts include George Abrams vs. Ben Wojack; Mike Morton vs. Johnny Gilley, and Tommy Hoover vs. Joe Magio.

First Quarter Activity Shows 25% Decline

Moderate Improvement Is Predicted for This Month and March.

New York, Feb. 4.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co. says today:

"Business activity in January was about in line with earlier expectations. Following a precipitous drop in industrial production in each of the final four months of 1937, a general leveling off was witnessed last month, with further recessions in some lines offset by moderate improvement in others. The Standard Statistics index of industrial production for January is estimated at around 70.5 (1926 equals 100). This compares with 72.2 for December, but represents a decline of around 30 per cent in five months.

"It is probable that modest improvement will be witnessed this month and in March, but it is unlikely that the index for the first quarter as a whole will average much, if any, more than 75.0, or roughly 25 per cent below the first quarter of 1937. In short, while there are signs that the business recession has been halted, at least temporarily, the improvement in prospect for the next few months is not particularly encouraging and certainly will not be sufficient to cause a marked reduction in unemployment.

Labor Complications.

"A number of important labor agreements between the CIO and industry come up for discussion this month and next. Negotiations between the United States Steel Corporation and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and the policy adopted by the corporation will probably have an important influence on the outcome of other negotiations in the steel as well as other industries.

"Despite reports to the contrary, downward wage adjustments have been quietly made in a number of leading lines. For example, one large industry, which is strongly unionized, has been able to make two reductions in the past several months, with virtually no opposition by the labor leaders. An independent steel company recently cut all wages 20 per cent, which may be a straw in the wind.

"While the maintenance of high wages is socially desirable, they are not economically feasible when other cost and demand factors are well out of line. It is generally recognized that the maintenance of wages in 1930 merely prolonged the readjustment process and probably delayed the later recovery."

European Steel Men Arrive for Talks

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Representatives of the European steel cartel arrived today on the French liner Normandie to confer with American steel makers in an effort to bring about an international "gentlemen's understanding" on steel export prices.

The European delegation, which will be in this country for a week or so, was headed by Hector Dieudonne, of Luxembourg, director-general of the cartel, and the Earl of Dudley, chairman of the British Iron & Steel Corporation.

Cotton Higher With Covering

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Although early advances in cotton today attracted increased hedge selling, the market again developed a steadier tone toward the close. May, which had reacted from 8.63 to 8.53, closed at 8.58, with final prices 5 to 9 points net higher.

With the market more than $1.00 a bale above the early lows for the weeks, increased hedging through spot houses and realizing developed. Reactions to around the previous closing levels by mid-afternoon, however, attracted trade buying and covering.

Cottonseed Oil.

Cottonssed oil was firmer today on increased covering and buying by Southern and European interests. Final prices were 10 to 11 points net higher, with sales of 119 contracts. Bleachable spot nominal: March closed 7.59; May, 7.65; July, 7.71; September, 7.75.

Standard Gas Output.

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Electric output of the public utility operating companies in the Standard Gas & Electric Co. system for the week ended January 29 totaled 104,537,540 kilowatt-hours, an increase of 5.7 per cent compared with the corresponding week last year.

Cotton Seat Up $50.

New York, Feb. 4.—The membership of Kenneth H. McCormack in the New York Cotton Exchange was sold today to Marshall Goor, jr., for another for $9,800, this price being $50 in advance of the previous sale.

War Alarms Lift Wheat 2c Per Bushel

Heavy Profit-Taking Cuts Net Advance to 1¼ Cents a Bushel.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 4.—An upward whirl of 2 cents a bushel in Chicago wheat values today from an early low point accompanied sudden renewal of European war talk.

Despite extensive profit-taking on the bulge in prices, the wheat market here showed only about ½ cent reaction at the last from the day's peak. Late estimates put European purchases of North American wheat today at 400,000 bushels, including moderate amounts to Germany. Something of a wet blanket, however, was thrown on wheat-buying ardor in Chicago when the Liverpool market closed without showing any price upturn of consequence.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 1 cent to 1¼ cents above yesterday's finish, May, 95⅛@95¼; July, 90⅞@91; Corn, ¼@½ up; May, 59½@59⅝; July, 60⅜@60½; oats unchanged to ⅛ advance, rye unchanged to 1 cent bulge, and provisions unchanged to 10 cents higher.

Industry Increases Copper Consumption

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Copper consumption by industrial users of about one-half the domestic total for 1937 increased to 444,200 tons against 384,200 for the previous year, the American Bureau of Metal Statistics said today.

Year-end lead stocks dropped to 208,803 tons from the previous year end tonnage of 246,311, and compared to 194,836 tons last December 1, the bureau said. Refined pig lead tonnage January 1, 1938 totaled 119,837, compared with 106,583 for last December 1, and 165,159 January 1, 1937.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Advance Slowly After Early Decline; Bonds Hesitant; Wheat Higher.

New York, Feb. 4.—Stocks closed at irregularly higher prices after early uncertainty. Sales volume failed to reach a million shares and there was no great enthusiasm on the rally. Bonds were dull and mostly lower. Commodity prices were steady. May wheat rose a cent to 95⅛ cents a bushel.

Stocks at the beginning looked as though they might be carried down for the third time and perish of submersion, but after Telephone dipped to 127½ it rose 2 or 3 points. Steel rallied after sinking under 50. Other leading stocks managed to stiffen and the remainder of the day was given over largely to holding the gains or adding a bit to them. A good many stocks were, nevertheless, unable to develop rallying power and the stock list was rather spotty throughout.

Foreign traders, who were reported to have been sellers on balance yesterday, were inactive until late this afternoon when a 50,000 share order for a selected list of stocks was said to have been placed. Toward the close advances of a half to more than 2 points were common among market leaders. Rails improved and equipments hardened. Metals were mixed. Motors and oils moved up leisurely.

Overexertion on the selling side and not any marked changed in the situation as revealed in the day's news probably accounted for the firmer tone in stocks. The market seems to have been pretty well liquidated and the decline so far has not dislodged a great many margin accounts, nor has it been accompanied by heavy trading volume which would suggest a panicky retreat.

Housing Bill.

Signing of the housing bill by the President may have given a little sentimental help to some sections of the market, but the measure is one of credit costs. It is wages and materials (indirectly wages, largely) plus the general uncertainties over business that retard building construction, even assuming that the country has a large deficit of construction to make good. No boom in building construction is at all likely to follow this offer of Government credit aid, any more than would a boom in business follow some new hocus-pocus for making credit cheaper or more easily available to the "small" business man, or the large business man either.

Should the country run into inflation, either before the next election or after that event (which it is likely to do if an early trade revival does not take place), a building boom might ensue. It would be based on speculation in real estate rather than upon any real demand for new housing or industrial demand. The country's troubles now, as even Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board has said, are not to be found in the credit basket.

In his weekly press meeting the President didn't say much to interest the markets. His observation that he did not desire to fix prices of farm products or to fix wages, but merely to put a floor under them, meant little, except that to call fixing by any other word leaves it fixing and economic baloney just the same. What the markets cared most about was the coolness of Congress at this time to such wage-fixing measures as the Black-Connery proposal, and the clear revelation that, as competent observers always have contended, the position of the small business man is about the same as that of the big business man.

Small Business.

It was unnecessary for President Roosevelt in his conference today to remind newspaper writers that they ought not to make fun of the small businessmen's meeting in Washington. No one is going to make fun of that meeting in so far as the outcome is concerned, whatever may be said of the methods of procedure. Steers are likely to stampede when a strange cowhand, as Mr. Roper, attempts to round them up for branding and dehorning. Least of all, the President is not going to find it funny that business men, big, little and indifferent, are fed up with mounting taxes, Government control over wages and prices, and the general uncertainties so much enjoyed by the authorities in Washington. They are demanding the same changes as are other business men and taxpayers.

Foreign exchange trading was only moderate. The advance of about 2 points in francs today was not taken too seriously, for the market was dull and thin, not only in French funds, but in sterling. The Bank of France and other French banks will be closed tomorrow, observing the five-day week, and speculators have become wary of week-end carryovers. Futures francs remained about the same. Though the price of gold in London was a penny lower, actually the American equivalent was at a new high at $35.0318, but the amount of gold sold in the London market was only £81,000, the smallest offering in a long time. Argentine pesos continued their march to new depths.

Telephone.

Selling of American Telephone continued in the early trading and the effect of the considerable fall in the price over the last week was reflected in weakness for some of the investment trust shares. Most of the trusts have had to take a bump from the drop in Telephone and some of them hold enough of the stock to feel a concussion.

Chicago Curb Votes To Quit Business

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—The Chicago Curb Exchange was headed today toward dissolution, with the approval of a majority of its members. Shrinkage in the volume of security trading was given as the reason for the decision to liquidate. Sixty-five of the 77 members voted at a special meeting yesterday to approve the board of governors recommendation that the exchange apply to the Securities and Exchange Commission for withdrawal of its license. The exchange was incorporated in 1927 and began business in July, 1928. Memberships were valued at $800 each.

Metropolitan Life Sets New World Records

43,000,000 Policies for $22,000,000,000 Owned by 29,000,000 Persons.

New York, Feb. 4.—The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. reported yesterday that it ended 1937 with the greatest number of policies and the largest amount of insurance ever in force for any company in the world. It had outstanding 43,600,964 policies for a total of $22,584,093,698, owned by about 29,000,000 persons in the United States and Canada, or two out of every nine persons in both countries.

This total is more than one-fifth of the insurance outstanding in all American life insurance companies. It covers almost 2,000,000 lives insured in group policies.

The figures were contained in the annual report of Frederick H. Ecker, chairman, and Leroy A. Lincoln, president, presented at a convention of the company's district managers in the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria.

Every class of insurance issued by the company reached the highest total in 1937 for any year. The Metropolitan issued last year $2,393,583,083 paid-for life insurance, of which $1,162,900,331 was ordinary; $1,016,508,158 was industrial and $214,174,594 was group. Revivals and increases, including net increases of group policies after issue, amounted to $768,368,084.

Payments to Policy Holders.

Payments to policy holders last year amounted to more than $500,000,000 for the sixth successive year, the amount being $525,876,271. Payments for ordinary insurance, including group, amounted to $278,189,011, industrial to $234,266,145 and accident and health to $13,121,115.

Dividends to policy holders, payable in 1938, will total more than $100,000,000, the company having reserved $101,023,188 from last year's earnings for this purpose.

Oil Shares Lead Curb Advance

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The curb market developed a somewhat firmer tone today, with oil shares in demand. Creole Petroleum at 23¼, Gulf 38, Pantepec 5¾ and International Petroleum 30 were all up fractionally.

A few lower-priced utilities were slightly higher, including Columbia Oil & Gas at 4⅛, Electric Bond & Share 7, and United Gas 3⅞. American Gas & Electric closed off ⅝ at 22¼, regaining part of an earlier loss.

Newmont Mining was off a point at 54 and Lake Shore Mines lost ⅞ at 57¼. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea at 47¾ and Sherwin Williams at 87½ were down slightly, while Pan-American Airways was a bit ahead at 15.

Volume totaled 146,000 shares against 188,000 Thursday.

Benjamin Franklin Fund Officers Accused

The Securities and Exchange Commission announced yesterday that it had filed a suit in equity before Judge William Clark in the United States District Court at Newark, N. J., charging that the Benjamin Franklin Foundation, Inc., of Philadelphia, has violated the registration and fraud provisions of the securities act of 1933 in the sale of Benjamin Franklin Foundation trust certificates. Three officers of the corporation, Frank D. Hughes, Walter Schryer and Edward Tiel Clarke, are also charged with violating the registration provisions of the statute.

The bill alleged that since February 26, 1936, the defendants had sold to the public over $4,000,000 of Benjamin Franklin Foundation trust certificates and were preparing to sell $10,000,000 of additional securities. The bill described the "complicated financial arrangement" behind the securities, characterized by the defendants as a "thrift" or "savings plan," as actually "a trust on a trust, with two sets of trustees and with two sets of sponsors' fees and expenses and other costs of operation."

Commodity Prices Decline in Week

The Labor Department announced yesterday a drop of 0.6 per cent in the week ended January 29. This wholesale commodity prices during decrease brought the general index of the wholesale commodity group to 80.3 per cent of the 1926 average.

The department said the decline for the same week last month was 0.9 per cent, and for the same period one year ago 6 per cent. Officials said the decrease during the week ended January 29 was caused by the continued decline in the price of farm products and a drop in food prices.

Steel Plant Budget $165,000,000 for Year

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The Nation's steel companies this year will spend $165,000,000 for new equipment and construction, a substantial drop under $320,000,000 so spent last year, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today.

"The prospective decline from the 1937 total reflects not only the current low level of operations, but also the fact that many companies completed large expansion programs during 1937," the extension said.

Freight Traffic Recedes 15.3% From Year Ago

Total of 553,176 Cars for January 29 Week 3% Under Previous Week.

Loading of revenue freight for the week ended January 29 totaled 553,176 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was a decrease of 99,846 cars or 15.3 per cent below the corresponding week in 1937 and a decrease of 309,170 cars or 35.9 per cent below the same week in 1930. Loading of revenue freight for the week of January 29 was a decrease of 17,157 cars or 3 per cent below the preceding week.

Miscellaneous freight loading totaled 199,336 cars, a decrease of 7,494 cars below the preceding week, and a decrease of 65,301 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Loading of merchandise less than carload lot freight totaled 142,180 cars, a decrease of 3,367 cars below the preceding week, and 10,991 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Coal loading amounted to 129,344 cars, an increase of 4,238 cars above the preceding week, but a decrease of 10,574 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Grain Loadings Drop.

Grain and grain products loading totaled 31,611 cars, a decrease of 4,540 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 2,004 cars above the corresponding week in 1937. In the Western districts alone, grain and grain products loading for the week of January 29 totaled 19,204 cars, a decrease of 3,494 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 204 cars above the corresponding week in 1937.

Livestock loading amounted to 12,890 cars, a decrease of 2,683 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 469 cars above the corresponding week in 1937. In the Western districts alone, loading of livestock for the week of January 29 totaled 9,845 cars, a decrease of 1,967 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 465 cars above the corresponding week in 1937.

Forest products loading totaled 24,759 cars, a decrease of 2,483 cars below the preceding week, and 6,118 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Ore loading amounted to 6,973 cars, a decrease of 186 cars below the preceding week, and 3,727 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Coke loading amounted to 6,083 cars, a decrease of 642 cars below the preceding week, and 5,610 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

All districts, except the Pocahontas and Southern, reported decreases compared with the corresponding week in 1937. All districts, however, reported decreases compared with the corresponding week in 1930.

Member Stock Trading 24.17 Per Cent of Total

By the Associated Press.

Round-lot transactions of New York Stock Exchange members in the week ended January 8 comprised 24.17 per cent of total exchange dealings, the Securities and Exchange Commission reported today. Total round-lot volume for the period was 6,483,410 shares, or 7.2 per cent larger than reported on the ticker.

Round-lot transactions of members initiated on the floor were 8.98 per cent of all transactions, those initiated off the floor were 3.99 per cent. Round-lot transactions of specialists were 11.20 per cent of total exchange turnover.

Robert O'Hara Funeral Rites Set for Monday

Bureau of Engraving Aide, Active Mason, Expires at 57.

Funeral services for Robert Burke O'Hara, 57, of 142 Twelfth street southeast, superintendent of the examining division of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, will be held at 2 p. m. Monday in the Lee undertaking establishment, with burial in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mr. O'Hara died Thursday in Emergency Hospital after an illness of two months. He had been active in Masonic affairs and was a member of the B. B. French Lodge, F. A. A. M.; Brightwood Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar; Adoniram Council, R. & S. M., and Almas Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

Surviving Mr. O'Hara are his wife, Mrs. Emma O'Hara; two daughters, Mrs. William Eskew Grant and Mrs. Richard C. Varela, of Washington; two brothers, Walter and Charles O'Hara, of Barcroft, Va., and two sisters, Mrs. Hume Dortch and Mrs. Mason Brent, both of Bedford, Va. He also leaves one grandson.

Mrs. Elenore Ryan Dies in Hospital

Mrs. Elenore A. Ryan, 31, wife of Representative Elmer J. Ryan, of Minnesota, died last night in Georgetown Hospital, where she had been ill since the birth of a daughter, Jacqueline, January 14.

Well known in Congressional circles here, Mrs. Ryan was a native of Glencoe, Minn. Besides her husband, she is survived by a son, Elmer J. Ryan, jr., the newborn daughter, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Moravec, of Glencoe; a brother, Theodore Moravec, of New London, Minn.; two sisters, Mrs. Henry L. Peters, of Glencoe and Mrs. Charles Plukrabck, of Los Angeles, Calif.

Her body will lie in the Hanlon undertaking establishment, at 641 H street northeast, from 2 to 4 p. m. today. The remains will then be taken to Minnesota for funeral services and burial.

W. R. Domdera, 55, Dies; Rites Monday

William R. Domdera, 55, died Thursday at his home, 638 Sixth street northeast, following a protracted illness.

A native of Frostburg, Md., he had been a resident of Washington for 33 years and was employed at the Atlantic & Pacific warehouse for eight years.

Domdera was a member of Trinity Lodge, No. 5, Shepherds of Bethlehem, and True Blue Council of the Sons and Daughters of Liberty.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mazie Domdera, and six children, William R. jr., Delmar, Clarence, Ruth, Louis and Mrs. Dorothy White.

Funeral services will be held Monday at his residence. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

CCC Rescinds Order To Consolidate Offices

By the Associated Press.

Civilian Conservation Corps offices reported yesterday an order to close the Northern District C. C. C. headquarters at Indiana, Pa., had been countermanded.

The original order contemplated a consolidation which would have sent the Indiana staff to Towson, Md. The Washington offices said the Third Corps Area commandant had rescinded the order.

Christ Church Is Scene of Rites for Former Southern Chief.

Fairfax Harrison, retired president of the Southern Railway Co who died Wednesday, was buried yesterday in Ivy Hill Cemetery, Alexandria.

His body was placed beside that of his father, Burton Harrison, onetime secretary to Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy, following services at Christ Episcopal Church, conducted by the Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector.

Mr. Harrison, who retired three months ago from presidency of the railroad, a position he had held since 1913, died Wednesday in Union Memorial Hospital in Baltimore, following an operation. Associates in the railway company were pallbearers yesterday.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Hetty Harrison; a son, Richard Harrison, and three daughters, Mrs. Ursula Beard and Misses Sally and Constance Harrison.

Mr. Harrison was a descendant of Bryan Lord Fairfax, Earl of Cameron, one of the early rectors of Christ Church. Lord Fairfax was buried in the family plot at Ivy Hill in 1802.

Rites Tomorrow For Mrs. Winters

Mrs. Hattie Cherner Winters, 62, died yesterday at her home, 1725 Kenyon street northwest, after a year's illness.

A native of Russia, Mrs. Winters had lived in Washington for the past 25 years. Her husband, Samuel Winters, is the proprietor of the Winters' Antique Shop, 619 Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Mrs. Winters formerly served as president of the Ladies Auxiliary of Congregation Tifereth Israel and as vice president of the Hebrew Ladies Aid Circle. She took an active interest in the Hebrew Home for the Aged and other charitable agencies.

Besides her husband she is survived by four sons, Joseph, Leon, Henry and Reubin Cherner, and two daughters, Mrs. Abraham Latkoff and Mrs. Henry Gertler, all of Washington.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow in the Danzansky funeral home, 3501 Fourteenth street northwest. Interment will be in Tifereth Israel Cemetery.

Mrs. Harrington Is Buried Here

Funeral services were held yesterday at the National Cathedral for Mrs. Eleanor Reyburn Harrington, 44, wife of Lt. Col. F. C. Harrington, U. S. Army Corps of Engineers, an assistant Works Progress administrator. Mrs. Harrington died Wednesday in Emergency Hospital, following a long illness.

Mrs. Harrington, a native of Philadelphia, was daughter of John E. Reyburn, former member of Congress and former mayor of Philadelphia.

Besides her husband, whom she married in New London, Conn. in 1915, Mrs. Harrington is survived by a son, William S. Harrington, a student at Yale University, and a daughter, Mary Eleanor, aged 9.

FOLDING CHAIRS—200 used

Bob Burns Says—

I'll have to admit there are quite a few hams in pictures out here but to me the worst ham of all ain't in pictures. He's the lady killer type who likes to talk about the hearts he's broken and he imagines if he ever got in pictures he'd have women swoonin' in theaters all over the country.

I was sittin' in a restaurant with Granpa Snazzy the other day and one of them Beau Brummels with oily, plastered-down hair sat down at the counter by us and before we knew it, he was tellin' us about a girl who was crazy about him and that he'd turned down. Grandpa says, "Well, what happened to the poor girl?"

The lady killer says, "Why, she married a wealthy man on Long Island." Granpa says, "Well, it just goes to show what a girl will turn to in desperation."

Do Democrats Want a Conservative or a New Dealer?

Thru postcards and interviewers, the Gallup Poll has asked Democrats thruout the nation this question: "If President Roosevelt is not a candidate for re-election in 1940, would you prefer a conservative type of candidate or a New Dealer?" Then another question was asked, "If President Roosevelt does not run again, whom would you favor?" Look for the answers to these two questions, as reported by the Gallup Poll in Sunday's Washington Post.

Ickes Emerges Victor in Tiff With Senators

Doubt of His Qualifications Turns Out to Be a 'Misunderstanding.'

Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes and his department emerged victors last night after a stormy session of the Public Lands Committee investigating the qualifications of Ebert K. Burlew, his administrative assistant, who has been nominated for Assistant Secretary.

First Ickes' name was bandied about the hearing in what later developed into a misunderstanding.

"From what I have heard it seems that we need a new Secretary, instead of directing the inquiry as to whether the Assistant Secretary be appointed," snapped Senator Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey.

Smathers Explains.

But later Smathers declared he meant no criticism of Ickes, who refused to comment when he heard the statement.

Smathers added he intended, in his remark to the committee, to inquire whether Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, was "undertaking to show through the evidence that a new Secretary was needed."

"My remarks," he explained, "were not to be construed as a criticism. I am supporting the Administration and all the Cabinet members."

Pittman earlier had asked the committee to investigate a reported shortage of $105,000 in the accounts of the Interior Department's cafeteria in connection with Burlew's qualifications for the appointment as First Secretary.

Explains Procedure.

Ickes last night formally explained that there never had been any shortage in the cafeteria and that the cafeteria was operated, as restaurants in most of the Government departments, by the Welfare whose affairs are controlled by a and Recreational Association, a nonprofit making sharing corporation board of trustees composed of employes from various Government agencies. The reported shortage based on a rejected interpretation of the association's contract in 1934, Ickes pointed out, when the old Office of Public Buildings and Parks was taken over by the Interior Department.

"Senator Pittman made a serious misstatement of fact which I am sure he would be the first to want corrected," said Ickes.

Profits Divided.

"There never was any misappropriation or embezzlement of any funds.

"Neither is it true that the Department of the Interior, or the Secretary, has any jurisdiction over or responsibility for the management of the cafeteria of the Interior Department Building or any other Government building in Washington."

Ickes explained that 50 per cent of the profits of the association go for the benefit of Government employes and recreational activities. The other 50 per cent go into the Treasury.

"There never was any question of defalcation or embezzlement," asserted Ickes. "The only issue was what portion was payable to the United States Treasury. In order to settle this, I arranged for a committee consisting of three representatives from the Interior and two from the association. A reaudit determined the sum due the Treasury, and this was paid."

Soil Bill Explained To Va. Senate Unit

Richmond, Va., Feb. 4 (AP).—One of the most far-reaching bills laid before the 1938 Virginia legislature, the legislative advisory council's measure for creating soil conservation districts to combat erosion, which has damaged more than 14,000,000 acres of land in the State, was explained today to the Senate Committee on Agriculture in a two-hour session.

John R. Hutcheson, agricultural extension director at Virginia Beach, who served on a council sub-committee which drafted the bill, described it as a "departure from our way of thinking and acting" and emphasized that he appeared as neither a proponent nor an opponent of the proposal.

After he had explained the bill in detail and answered a number of questions by committee members, the group set another special hearing for next Wednesday at 10 a. m., when Senator Henry T. Wickham will tell why he opposes the bill.

ICC to Continue Higher Coal Rates

By the Associated Press.

Interstate Commerce Commission officials yesterday said the commission had voted not to suspend tariffs increasing freight rates on some kinds of coal shipped from Southwestern States to points in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska.

Southwestern States affected are Arkansas, Missouri and Oklahoma. The Arkansas Corporation, the Fort Smith (Ark.) traffic bureau, the St. Joseph (Mo.) coal bureau and the Nebraska Lumber Association had asked the I. C. C. to suspend the rates pending investigation into their "reasonableness and propriety."

Proud Papa Penguin Guards Mama and Egg

There's much excitement and curiosity at the Zoo these days, for the penguin family is expecting an addition. If the egg Mama Penguin has laid hatches, the young penguins will be the first ever born at the Zoo. Father Penguin is being paternalistic, protective and ever-vigilant, lest the other penguins interfere.

11 Mayors Ask $400,000,000 More for WPA

Midwest Executives Fear Results of Dropping 150,000 Men.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Mayors of 11 Middle Western cities, seeking to stem a sharp curtailment of relief employment, urged Congress and the President tonight to approve a $400,000,000 deficiency appropriation to the Works Progress Administration.

The officials voiced alarm at the prospect of 150,000 workers being dropped from WPA rolls in the Midwest region on March 1.

Citing a "drastic decline" in industrial employment with mounting demands for relief work, the mayors asserted direct relief provided by the cities "involves an extreme burden on taxpayers and threatens our cities and States with bankruptcy."

Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago, who called the session, said a four-member committee would go to Washington Tuesday to confer with Aubrey Williams, assistant Federal WPA Administrator.

Detroit, Feb. 4 (AP).—A United Automobile Workers mass meeting that filled Cadillac square, in the heart of Detroit's business district, roared its approval late today of a proposal for a moratorium in Michigan on debts owed by unemployed persons.

The crowd, estimated by police at between 50,000 and 75,000 and by Homer Martin, international president of the U. A. W., at 250,000, adopted by acclamation half a dozen resolutions demanding more generous treatment of the unemployed.

Martin demanded for Detroit "immediate relief of $1,000,000 a week," and a WPA allotment of $150,000,000 for Michigan.

Ex-Senator Butler Ill in Takoma Park

Marion Butler, 75, North Carolina's Populist Senator from 1895 to 1901, has been seriously ill at Washington Sanatorium, Takoma Park, Md., since January 10, it was disclosed yesterday.

Attending physicians said, however, his condition was not critical and his eventual recovery might be expected. The nature of his illness was not revealed.

Butler was prominently identified with North Carolina politics until the Democrats came into power at the turn of the century.

Former Senator F. M. Simmons defeated him for reelection to the Senate in 1900. He was a delegate to the Republican national conventions of 1912, 1916, 1920 and 1924.

C.I.O. Unions Still Worry A.F.L. Heads

Miami, Feb. 4 (AP).—American Federation of Labor officials were far from a decision tonight on the question of expelling unions affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization.

The A. F. L. executive council adjourned for the week-end after settling other matters, and President William Green said the C. I. O. problem would be taken up Monday or Tuesday.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

William A. Albaugh presents Miriam Wilson and her dancers in the National Theater. Dancers: Miriam Winslow, Barbara Benzaquin, Wendolyn Bever, Olive Cousens, June MacLaren, Jacqueline Magrath, Christine Maynard, Mary Morse. Pianist: Mary Campbell.

Coming on the heels of recent demonstrations of the modern dance by Martha Grahame, Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman, Miss Winslow and her assistants seemed to be arguing the cause of conservatism yesterday afternoon. Their program made few concessions to the contemporary theories of choreography and might almost have represented the status of the "dance concert" two decades ago. Only an occasional gyration or group movement recognized the existence of new concepts.

Within these limitations, both chronological and ideational, the troupe offered an entertainment characterized by variety in themes and expertness in movement. After a patterned visualization of a Mozart allegretto, an interpretation of a Chopin prelude, and the slow pantomime of a Spanish infanta to music by Satie, there came seven dances such as the passepied and sarabande accompanied by the period music of Telemann, Lully, Purcell and Gibbons.

One of the more ambitious numbers, Ravel's "Valses Nobles et Sentimentales," was treated with complete disregard for either the waltz or the ironic implications of the music. It was difficult to trace other than an abstract relation between the dance and its rhythmic source. Much more satisfactory was the pantomime of Louisa Alcott's "Little Women" projected against the accompaniment of Chaikovski's piano variations on an original theme. This had charm in its evocation of a vanished epoch.

Another successful ensemble was the vivacious gypsy dance to music by Zoltan Kodaly. An interesting piece of choreography was arranged to Handel's best-known largo which has served the most unlikely purposes since it was first heard in 1738 as an operatic aria. Miss Winslow's individual versatility was applied to several solo dances as diverse in type as a "Boy Crusader" and "Leprechaun."

14,500 Fidelity Claims Will Be Settled Shortly

First Federal President Notifies Shareholders of 85% Payment.

Harry Somerville, president of the First Federal Savings & Loan Association, yesterday announced final plans for transferring to his organization the claims against the Fidelity Building & Loan Association.

In letters to 14,500 Fidelity shareholders, Somerville said they would receive notices shortly to present their cards of notification and evidence of claim at the offices of the association, 610 Thirteenth street northwest, and in return would receive an account book showing their investment in the First Federal Savings & Loan Association, "equal to 85 per cent of your established claim."

Somerville explained "the acceptance of an account book does not preclude your conversion of your new account into cash, either in full or in part if you so desire."

He said a stagger plan would be followed to permit handling of about 500 claims a day.

Somerville said the 85 per cent basis for transfer of claims had been fixed following surveys by the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the receiver for the Fidelity and officials of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and a final examination by three court-appointed appraisers. The court approved transfer of assets on January 25.

Dr. Robert A. Hare To Head Hospital

Dr. Robert A. Hare, for ten years with the Sansum Clinic in Santa Barbara, Calif., will become medical director of the Washington Sanitarium and Hospital in Takoma Park.

Dr. Hare, who is a graduate of the College of Medical Evangelists in Loma Linda, Calif., has taken postgraduate work in England and was for a time the medical director of the Hinsdale Sanitarium at Hinsdale, Ill. He is a fellow of the American College of Physicians.

The Sansum Clinic has studied use and management of insulin for control of diabetes.

Dr. Hare succeeds Dr. D. H. Kress, acting director, who for many years has been a member of the staff of the sanitarium and was its first medical director.

Nation Rushes To Sign Up for Housing Plan

President Approves Act to Put Home in Reach of Average Man.

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt's $3,000,000,000 low-cost housing program, which he hopes will be an antidote to the trade slump, literally roared into being yesterday with persons eager to build homes swamping the Federal Housing Administration and its regional offices with inquiries as to how they could participate.

The program got under way as it was announced that Mr. Roosevelt had signed the housing act amendments approved by Congress Wednesday. The amendments clear away financial obstacles which heretofore have made is impossible for the average man to own his own home when paying rent was cheaper.

Builder Saves Money.

They liberalize mortgage and insurance provisions of the original act, thus saving the prospective builder considerable money, and they provide for Government guarantees of almost the full principal of any loans which banks or other investment houses make to the home-builder, thus protecting both the lending agency and the borrower.

Thousands of letters and telegrams deluged the FHA and its 68 regional offices. They came from both poor and rich, from bankers and investment brokers, from contractors and building materials industries, but chiefly from the salaried workers who aspired to become home owners but didn't have the wherewithal.

Co-operation Asked.

Administrator Stewart McDonald, in launching the program, called for the "wholehearted, voluntary co-operation of private capital and private industry" to make it a success. He said the Government was ready with the necessary machinery but that lending institutions, materials manufacturers and distributors, builders, labor and developers must co-operate.

President Roosevelt asked for the amendments in a special message November 29 as the keystone of his attack on the recession. He hopes, through the program, to draw billions of dollars of idle capital into housing, thus priming the pump for general business.

90 Pct. Insurance.

The amended act permits the FHA to insure mortgages up to 90 per cent on homes costing $6,000 or less. On more costly houses the FHA will insure 90 per cent of the first $6,000 and 80 per cent of the balance. The present rule is 80 per cent of the cost regardless of the size, although a $16,000 limit is imposed.

The new act permits amortization over a 20-year period, as a present except that loans on homes costing $6,000 or less, if the homes are started before July 1, 1939, may be extended to 25 years.

The present mortgage insurance premium of ½ of 1 per cent is reduced to ¼ of 1 per cent on homes costing $6,000 or less, but retained at ½ of 1 per cent on the others. Interest rates and service charges are cut from 5½ per cent to 5 per cent, and payments will be on the outstanding balance instead of the original face value.

In the field of heavy construction, the act permits insurance of private ventures up to $200,000 and limited dividend housing units up to $5,000,000 each.

James Shoemaker, Of Montgomery, Is Heart Victim

James E. Shoemaker, 49-year-old Montgomery County policeman, of Bethesda, Md., died last night of a heart attack in Georgetown Hospital, a few minutes after he had attempted to quiet a disturbance at Sunset Hall, restaurant on Conduit road.

Bethesda police said Shoemaker fainted as he tried to quiet a disorderly woman in the restaurant, which is operated by Shoemaker's wife. He was rushed to the hospital by his son, Edward L. Shoemaker.

Meanwhile Bethesda police held the woman for investigation. They withheld her name.

Shoemaker, member of the Montgomery County police force for eight years, had been ill of pleurisy for several days. He was off duty at the time of his death.

Shoemaker, whose home was on Conduit road in Bethesda, is survived by his wife, Florence, and three sons.

National Rifle Group Lauded By President

Annual Dinner Here Hears Message Commending Promotion Worth.

President Roosevelt last night commended the "successful promotion of rifle marksmanship," carried on by the National Rifle Association in a message read at the annual dinner of the organization at the Mayflower.

"Both national and international rifle marksmanship, which you encourage, have served to inject the idea of sport into rifle shooting," he continued, adding that he hoped "it may always be kept on this basis which, while encouraging a free spirit of rivalry also makes an essential contribution to the national defense."

Dr. Thomas Healey, dean of law at Georgetown University, in discussing the international situation, stated that the foreign policy of the United States is without definite objective, and intimated that President Roosevelt and Admiral Leahy have aggressive intentions in recommending an increase in the Navy.

Until purposes of the foreign policy of the Administration are clear, he said, no one can know what the armed forces are intended to defend.

"Many well informed students disagree with Admiral Leahy's statement that we are nearer war than at any time in the past 20 years," Dr. Healey remarked.

He explained that he was convinced reappearance of a "realist" point of view among European statesmen was aiding stabilization of peace and emphasized that the rearmament of Great Britain and France was also an important factor for peace.

Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson declared that he was not in agreement with Dr. Healey's statements about foreign affairs and national defense policies, and requested that in the future when they spoke from the same forum, these policies not be criticized.

Among guests were Gen. Malin Craig, Army chief of staff; Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, commandant of the Marine Corps; Rear Admiral R. R. Weesche, commandant of the Coast Guard; Senator Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota; Senator Hiram Johnson, of California; Col. Nathaniel C. Nash, second vice president of the National Rifle Association, and Col. F. C. Endicott, executive officer of the National Rifle Matches at Camp Perry.

Maj. Gen. M. A. Reckord acted as toastmaster.

Dinner for Garnett Is Slated Feb. 16

Attorney General Homer Cummings and many justices of the District Court of Appeals and District Court will be guests at a testimonial dinner for former United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett at the Mayflower Hotel, February 16, Edmund M. Toland, chairman of the dinner committee, announced last night.

In addition, Leo A. Rover, also a former United States attorney for the District, has agreed to act as toastmaster, while Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner, of Appeals Court; Justice Jesse C. Adkins, of District Court, and John E. Laskey, a third former United States attorney, will be speakers.

Guilford S. Jameson, chairman of the publicity committee, stated 200 tickets had already been disposed of.

Democratic Group Asks Vote for D. C.

"Extension of democracy" to Washington was advocated in a resolution unanimously adopted by 175 members of the Democratic League of the District at a meeting last night at the group's headquarters, 1500 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

"The same issues are at stake today in Washington that drove our Revolutionary ancestors to stage the Boston tea party—taxation without representation," declared J. Nelson Anderson.

A convention of the District Suffrage Association March 18, was announced by Arthur Clarendon Smith.

District policy, should rest in the hands of its citizens, Charles A. Franklin said.

President Enjoys 'Spring' Weather

Lured from the White House by spring-like weather, President Roosevelt went for a brief automoblie ride yesterday taking Secretary of State Hull with him, after a Cabinet meeting.

Earlier, he told reporters he might take a three-day holiday at Hyde Park, over Washington's Birthday. Tentative plans call for his departure February 19 for his Duchess County home and return February 24.

In the morning, Postmaster General Farley presented to Mr. Roosevelt Ramsey S. Black, his new third assistant. Black said it was just a social call.

Unwilling Victim of a Black Cat

Private Carl Beck, of No. 5 Truck Company, was injured in a 12-foot fall from a tree on top of which at a 65-foot level was perched a black cat which had yowled there for two days. The cat, unappreciative of rescue efforts, then leaped to the ground without suffering a scratch and scampered away. Beck likes dogs but has little use for cats.

Noted Suffrage Leader Expires In Texas at 76

Mrs. Pennybacker Was President of Women's Club Federation.

By the Associated Press.

Austin, Tex., Feb. 4.—Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, 76, internationally known woman leader, died at her home here today. She had long been in failing health.

Mrs. Pennybacker was a former president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, a leader in the woman's suffrage moement and president of the Chautauqua Woman's Club, of Chautauqua Assembly, New York.

A close friend of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mrs. Pennybacker was often a guest at the White House.

Mrs. Pennybacker's activities covered many fields, including teaching, politics, war relief, woman suffrage and writing. Her list of services in addition to the presidency of the general and State federations of women's clubs, included associate membership in the Democratic National Committee, membership in the Y. W. C. A. National War Committee of One Hundred, and advisory committee for food administration in Texas and chairmanship of the child welfare committee of the League of Women Voters.

She was a member of the jury of award for the Woodrow Wilson Foundation.

Fairfax Police Hunt Hit-and-Run Driver

Police of Fairfax County yesterday were searching for a hit-and-run driver who forced an automobile into a ditch on the Lee-Jackson highway near Annandale.

Miss Dorothy Nicholson, 23, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse W. Nicholson, of Chevy Chase, Md., and secretary to Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of Upperville, Va., was riding in the Whitney car driven by William Royston, of Marshall, the chauffeur. Both were treated at Alexandria Hospital.

According to police, a truck sideswiped the car forcing it from the highway narrowly missing a bridge abutment, nose-dived about 10 feet into a narrow creek bed.

Adam McCandlish Funeral Monday

Adam McCandlish, 62, a Government sewer contractor here for 40 years, died yesterday after a long illness at the home of his sister, Mrs. William B. Clemmer, 2401 Twelfth street northeast.

Mr. McCandlish was a native of Washington and succeeded his late father, James T. McCandlish, in business. He was a member of the Masonic order. A bachelor, he is survived by another sister, Mrs. Patrick J. Daugherty.

Funeral services will be held at 10 a. m. Monday at the Chambers Funeral Home, with burial in Rock Creek Cemetery.

2 Slain, 5 Shot As Police Raid Gang's Hideout

Two Detectives, Woman Wounded in Ohio Gun Battle.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 4.—Two bank robber suspects were killed and five persons, including three detectives, were wounded in a bullet-blazing police raid on a gang hideout here today.

The dead were not identified. Police at first identified one of the victims as Charles Bird, notorious bank robber, but police said later information indicated Bird was not involved.

The detectives had sought four men who robbed the Ohio National Bank of $3,500 five hours earlier.

Two Suspects Caught.

Two suspects were captured, one of them wounded.

Wounded were Detective Robert Cline, William Danner and Leo Phillips; Carl Boetscher, 32, of Cleveland, and Mrs. Mary Violet Watring, 38, of Columbus.

Cline was given a blood transfusion and was reported near death. Danner's condition also was serious.

One of the slain bandits fell in a rooming house, where the gang was trailed by Motorcycle Officer Lawrence Tucker. The second victim died in a hospital.

Mrs. Watring, a roomer in the house where police said the robber gang took rooms a week ago, was wounded in the thigh as she sought protection under a kitchen sink.

Boetscher was shot in the right lung. The other captured suspect, who identified himself as Stephen Figuli, 20, of Cleveland, told police he had participated in a Cleveland bank robbery last week.

Police said a large sum of money was found in a car parked in the rear of the raided house.

For 20 minutes the quiet West Side neighborhood was shattered by gunfire as the furious battle raged in and about the house, which was occupied by three families.

PWA Will Pay Memphis Million

By the Associated Press.

The Public Works Administration yesterday announced it would pay Memphis, $1,030,668 on Wednesday as the first installment of a $3,092,000 grant for the city's new power distribution system.

The money will be the first of many millions of dollars to be released by PWA as the result of a recent Supreme Court ruling that private power companies could not challenge PWA loans and grants for municipal power projects.
